EVIDENCE FOR PLUS JUNCTURE IN OLD INDO-ARYAN

For the Hindu grammarians pada, 'word' was the basic linguistic unit of syntax; they, therefore, discussed accent in words¹ and sandhi between words. The vākya, 'sentence' as a whole never received their attention. There have been studies however on Old Indo-Aryan demonstrating a relationship between the incidence of pitch accent and the type of clauses. Vocatives, for example, have no pitch accent if they stand with in a clause²; particles which are unmarked for accent occupy 'second position' in the clause.³ It may, therefore, be possible to determine the relationship between some pitch patterns and terminal junctures. In addition to terminal junctures, there seems to be evidence for a junctural feature within a clause and the present study is an attempt at bringing such evidence from the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, the earliest available prose text in Indo-Aryan. Besides its conservatism in accentuation, as well as in syntax and lexicon, the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, is closely related to the Vedas in its diction. Restrictions on phonotactic occurrence, of consonants and of vowels, as well as morphological evidence are used to set up the presence of a juncture.

Certain sequences of vowels and of consonants which do not occur within a word are, however, possible across words within an utterance. Generally, only homorganic nasals and plosives occur in sequence. Dental nasal, for example, is not tolerated before non-homorganic plosives. In such instances, the nasal will be assimilated to the homorganic nasal of the class of the following consonant.

E.g., *saptānnahomāñjuhoti*⁴ (1.3.8.1)⁶, '(He) sacrifices seven Annahomas.'

Sequences like -np-, -nbh-,⁶ however, occur across word boundaries, in an utterance, without being assimilated.

E.g., tān poṣān puṣyati (2.3.3.2), '(He) obtains (all) that prosperity'.

bahoreva bhūyān bhavati (2.2.3.3), '(He) becomes exceedingly great.'

Instances of this kind, where assimilation does not take place, provide evidence for the presence of a junctural feature, since otherwise the sequence is not possible. I, therefore, assume a juncture and write it with a plus. The above utterances then will be written in the following way.

tān+poṣān+puṣyati (2.3.3.2), bahoreva bhūyān+bhavati (2.2.3.3).

Similarly, the sequences -ng-, -nk-, and -nh- are not possible within a word, but they too are found across word boundaries. In the sequences below I set up a juncture.

n+voiced stop somagrḥān+gṛhṇāti (1.3.3.3), '(He) takes the bowl of Soma juice'.

payaeṇāiman+gṛheṣu paśuṣu dhatte (1.4.3.3), 'Bestows strength for himself and milk for his cattle', nidānavān+bhavati (2.2.11.6), 'He becomes the possessor of Nidāna',

4. Examples are cited without accent marks since the latter do not in any way contribute to the present discussion on plus juncture.

Allomorphic conditioning provides evidence for word boundaries, for example, taṃ prajā+anvāsṛjyanta (2.1.2.1.), 'Created beings after him.' compare :

prajāḥ paśava+ime lokāḥ (2.2.3.3), 'People, cattle and these worlds'.

Prajāḥ and prajā have to be considered allomorphs of one morpheme, since prajā occurs before voiced phonemes and prajāḥ before voiceless phonemes. Therefore prajā may be set off from the following segment. We have already assumed a juncture in such a case on the evidence of phonotactic restriction. The allomorph prajā is also found before voiced consonants as in the following :

dānakāmā + asmai prajā bhavanti (2.3.5.4), 'His progeny will be desirous of offering gifts'.

I consider that the transition in prajāḥ paśava- is different from that found in prajā bhavanti. This difference in transition we may mark with the plus. Further, phonotactically, the sequence -sb- is not possible within a word. Therefore s is lost before a voiced consonant. It may be noted that in all the instances we have assumed a juncture on the evidence of phonotactic restrictions, the junctural feature falls at the word boundary. I, therefore, write the above example in the following way :

dānakāmā + asmai prajā + bhavanti (2.3.5.4).

Similarly sequences -sd-, -sj-, and -sh- are not permitted. I assume in all these instances, where s is lost, a juncture, since we may identify the allomorph on distributional criteria.

yā + divyā + āpaḥ payasā saṃbabhūvuh (2.7.15.4), 'The divine waters which were born with milk.....'.

The allomorph yāḥ, with s becoming visarga, is found in instances where it is permitted to occur.

yāḥ purastāt prasarvanī (3 7.4.1), 'Which flow in the east.....'

When final s of words is lost before voiced consonants, the preceding vowel a > o. Here again I write a plus which will indicate the word boundary.

vi na + indra mṛdho + jahi (2.4.6 5), 'O Indra, vanquish our foes', śruto + gaṇa + ā tvā viśantu (2.4.3.10), '(May Indra), famous among the gods enter you'.

compare yajñam deveṣu naskṛdhi (2.4.2.3), 'Place our sacrifice in gods'.

nas and no are allomorphs conditioned by the environment.

Sequences -sp-, -sy-, -sr-, -sv-, and -ss- are possible both within words and across word boundaries. In the following instances, however, the final s is lost. Since in these instances too, by allomorphic identification we can set up the word boundary, I write it with a plus.

sa+satyam agnim cinute (3.12.5.10), 'He truly arranges fire'.

compare

tā no+devīssubhavāśśarma yacchata (3.5.12.1), 'May these easily invoked goddesses give us happiness.'

sa+punarvasvoragnim ādadhita (1.1.2.3), 'He should kindle fire in Punarvasu constellation'.

compare

bṛhaspatirnaḥ paripātu paścāt (3.1.1.5), 'May Bṛhaspati guard us from behind.'

apo+yācāmi bheṣajam (2.5.8.6), 'I beg for healing water'.

compare

apaḥ praṇayati (3.2.4.1), 'Fetches water'.

syonaṃ te sadanaṃ karomi (3.7.5.2), 'I make a place for your happiness.'

yo+rāya+iśe śatadāya+ukthyaḥ (2.8.1.4), 'Praiseworthy and giver of hundred gifts, who will himself be a master of wealth.....'

compare

mā yaḥ somam imam pibāt (3.7.8.3), '(It) shall not (reach) him who drinks this Soma.'

rāyaspoṣaṃ sahasriṇam (3.7.5.13), 'Thousandfold increase of wealth.'

devā+vā+ūrjaṃ vyabhajanta (1.1.3.10), 'The gods indeed distributed invigoration.'

compare

devāḥ pitaraḥ pitaro+devāḥ (3.7.5.4), 'O gods, protectors, O Manes, bright ones.'

Similarly, sequences -sm- and -sn- are possible within a word, but across word boundaries s is lost before m and n.

tato+no+maha+āvaha (2.4.1.8), 'Bring then to us the glory.'

compare

tataste'bhavan (2.1.4.1), 'Therefore they became.'

tasmādevam āha (3.2.1.4), 'He, therefore, said this way.'

I have indicated only some instances where we have evidence for assuming a juncture within a clause. Such evidence is also found across clauses, which we do not define here. I may here point to the absence of coalescence across clause boundaries.

sarvā+enam prajā+rājeti vadanti, etamutyam daśakṣipa+ityāha, āditya+vai prajāḥ (1.8.8.1), 'All the people call him king, (he) said that he is Daśakṣipa, the people are the Ādityas.'

vācodyanti, udvatirbhavanti (1.8.8.2), 'They increase by speech, they become lofty.'

The presence of the juncture feature in the above instances may be contrasted with what may be called 'smooth transition'.⁷ In sequences of consonants, smooth transition involves one of two changes: change of manner or change of position of articulation. Consonant sequences of differing manner change to sequences of the same manner of articulation, for example, ll for tl, and gdh for kdh.

yallājairjuhoti (3.8.14.4), 'Who worships with parched grain.....

bhiṣagdhenussarasvatī, (2.6.11.4), 'Healing cow is Sarasvatī'.

Consonant sequences of differing position change to sequences of same position, for example, jj for tj, and cc for tc.

mūtrājjanayanti retāḥ (2.6.4.2), 'Produce semen near the urinal tract.'

yadupāvati ciccikaḥ (2.5.5.6), 'The Ciccika bird while it is nearby.....'

7. For details, see Whitney, W.D., 1960, Sanskrit Grammar, 34-87, Cambridge, Massachusetts, Harvard University Press.

In vowel sequences, smooth transition involves lengthening, diphthongization and processes such as $i > y$.

īat prāśnāt (1.1.9.3), 'She ate that,' priyeṇaivainam dhāmnā samardhayati (1.1.9.6), 'Causes him to thrive in favorite abode,' taṁ viśvakarmā bhūtvā'bhyajayat (1.2.3.3), 'Becoming the architect of the universe he conquered it.'

Our conclusions on the evidence for juncture feature within a clause may be compared with the treatment of such features by the native grammarians and Vedic phoneticians. They do not explicitly mention junctural features between the consonant sequences which we have described earlier. Yet some indication of junctural feature is implied in vowel sequences where coalescence never takes place. Such are the vowels, \bar{i} , \bar{u} , e in dual forms. These vowels are given a special name, pragṛhya;⁸ since they do not coalesce with the following vowels, grammarians assume hiatus between them.

The particle u ,⁹ is also considered optionally a 'pragṛhya vowel', for it does not coalesce with the preceding vowel; e.g., ya+u cainamevaṁ veda (2.7.10.2), 'He too, who this knew this...'

The pragṛhya vowels are indicated in the Pada text by an appended iti. For example, asme iti; before iti, u , is always written in its lengthened and nasalized form $\bar{u} iti$.

Ṛgveda-prātiśākhya mentions four instances of hiatus:¹⁰

pura etā, tita unā, pra ugam, and nama uktibhiḥ

These and hiatus arising from the pragṛhya vowel u are classifiable under our group I. The hiatus arising from pragṛhya vowel in dual forms may be put under our group II.

To sum up: we have evidence for one phoneme of juncture within a clause. It has four characteristic positions in which occurrence can be demonstrated: one, between the consonant sequences which are possible only across words. Two are between vowel sequences; while some are genuine sequences of vowels, most of them result from loss of final s or from other reduction processes, such as $-e > a$, as in saṃrujānāḥ pipīṣa + indraśatruḥ (2.5 4.4), 'Indra's enemy crushed (his own) breaking army.'

8. īdūded dvivacanam pragṛhyam, Pāṇini I. i. 11.

The fourth is between a vowel and a consonant which results from the loss of final s of the preceding word.

The junctural feature which we have indicated may also have occurred in other positions, but I have found no means for determining them. In determining the role of this junctural feature within the phonological system of Vedic, we may note its resemblance to final consonants of words which occur between final vowel and initial vowel :

e.g., mahān annādaḥ (3.9.10.1), 'great eater of food'.

compare

maha + āvaha (2.4.1.8), 'Bring glory.'

devān āsādaya (2.4.1.11), 'Seat the gods'.

compare

devā + adhibrajan (2.7.16.1), 'Gods spoke'.

I tentatively assume that the role of this juncture was phonotactically equivalent to that of a consonant.¹¹ In the sequences of unexpected consonants interrupted by this juncture we would then assume clusters of at least three members. Between vowels plus is interpreted, of course as a single entity.

I have assumed for my description the phonemic analysis presented by Whitney and others. As an alternate phonemic analysis,¹² one might suggest that the vowels usually written as long vowels were sequences of two short vowels, e.g., ā is aa, ī ii, etc. By this system e would be analyzed as ai, o as au, so that one would arrive at the following vocalic nuclei for Sanskrit (omitting here r, l, and nuclei with m and n).

11. cf. Hockett, C.F., 1942, 'A System of Descriptive Phonology', Language 18, p. 17.

12. I owe this suggestion to Professor Werner Winter, now of the University of Kiel, who had served on my committee for Ph.D. at the University of Texas, U.S.A.

a	i	u	ai	au	aai
aa	ii	uu	ia	ua	aaui

Several rules will be necessary to interpret these nuclei for example,

1. a remains vocalic while non -a becomes semivocalic
2. Identical vowels fuse into long vowels
3. When two different non -a vowels occur, the first becomes semivocalic

Then iu may be read as yu, ui as vi.

This analysis would reduce the number of vowels in Sanskrit and with the assumption of plus juncture, no ambiguity would result. For example, indra+iva (2.4.2.9): upendra/upaindra (3.5.2.3)agna+aahuta

/a+a/ does not contrast with /aa/

These then are distinguished by positing of a juncture. It is however beyond the scope of my study to discuss further the two possible phonemic analyses.¹³

SOME THOUGHTS ON ANCIENT INDIAN POETICS

Literature is a supreme expression of culture. The prominent characteristics of Indian culture is a quest for harmony. The ancient thinkers lay down four objectives of life – Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa, and thereby seek to establish harmony in life through the discipline of the various urges of a person. Indian literature and literary criticism reflect the same tendency.

Ancient poets strictly followed the rules and regulations laid down by Ancient Poetics.

Bhāmaha, the most ancient critic, defined the Kāvya as śabdārthau. Word and sense constitute Kāvya according to Bhāmaha. Strains of music, though words, cannot be regarded as Kāvya because they do not convey any meaning to us. Gestures, though conveying sense, are not Kāvya, because they are not words. Poetry, therefore, must be word and sense. Bhāmaha thus seeks a harmony of words and sense in Kāvya. The invariable association of word and sense in Kāvya is emphasized by the later writers also. Mammaṭa defines Kāvya as tad adōṣau śabdārthau saguṇau analaṅkṛitī punaḥ kvāpi. Jagannātha tried to define Kāvya as śabdaḥ, but then, he had to add ramaṇīyārthapratipādakatva as a qualification to śabda.

An invariable association of the word and sense, however, is experienced in the sentences spoken in everyday life also. Words in Kāvya differ because we experience a particular beauty in Kāvya. The experience of beauty leads to the experience of delight, which is totally distinct from worldly pleasures and which is described as akhaṇḍacarvāṁsamāsādyu, vigalitaavedyāntara and brahmānandasahodara. The harmony of word and sense, thus culminates into the harmony of beauty and delight.

Ancient Poetics again insists on a harmony of poetry and appreciation. The beauty of Kāvya is so subtle and its experience so profound that an ordinary person is not capable of this experience. Only those readers who have developed keen sensitiveness as a result of the constant reading of poetry, can experience the beauty and delight of poetry, because such persons can easily identify themselves with the objects of description. Persons incapable of appreciating Kāvya are looked down upon and this is evident in a verse like this :

itaratāpaśaiāni yathecchayā vitara tāni sahe caturānana /
arasikeṣu rasābhinivedanaṃ śirasi mā likha mā likha mā likho ||

The appreciative readers are called sahṛdayas. Abhinavagupta defines the sahṛdaya as: yeṣāṃ kāvyānuśilanābhyāsavaśād viśadibhūte manomukure varṇanīyatanmayībhavanayogyatā te hṛdayasaṃvāḍabhājah saḥṛdayāḥ. 'Criticism and poetry, in other words, appreciative sensitiveness should be harmonious with the creative genius of the poet.

The experience of delight is known as rasanīṣpatti. Rasa is delight. Rasa is the element of emotion in Kāvya. There are some feelings which are latent in every human mind and which are called sthāyībhāvas or permanent feelings. The feelings of love, mirth, sorrow, anger, energy, fear, disgust, astonishment and tranquility remain latent in every human mind. These feelings, when intensified due to suitable vibhāvas, anubhāvas and vyabhicāribhāvas become rasa. These nine latent impressions, mentioned above are not exhaustive. As opposed to the sthāyī or permanent feelings there are some transitory feelings, which are known as sañcārī or vyabhicāribhāvas. There are thirty-three vyabhicāribhāvas. Human mind, however, is complex. It may experience two transitory feelings at a time. It may experience many transitory feelings at a time. It may even experience the rise and pacification of a transitory feeling. Ancient Poetics has taken into consideration all these complexities of human mind. A combination of two transitory feelings is known as bhāvasandhi. The combination of many transitory feelings is known as bhāvaśabalatā and the rise and pacification of a transitory feeling are known as bhāvodaya and bhāvasānti respectively. Even psuedo-rasas and psuedo-bhāvas are recognized and given the names rasābhāsas and bhāvābhāsas respectively. The element of emotion in Kāvya, therefore, is fully recognized by the Ancient Poetics. Critics have tried to explain the aesthetic experience by analysing the mental process of a reader. The utpattivāda of Bhaṭṭa Lollaṭa, the anumitivāda of Śrī Śaṅkuka, the bhogikaraṇavāda of Bhaṭṭa Nāyaka and the abhivaktivāda of Abhinavagupta offer the solutions of rasanīṣpatti.

The theory of Dhvani is another rich contribution of Ancient Poetics. Poetry, though differing from ordinary words, does not involve a different dictionary. The words used by Vālmīki and Vyāsa, the primeval poets, do not differ from those used by Kālidāsa, Bhavabhūti, or other poets. How, then, is it that Kālidāsa is considered to be greater than the other poets? How, again, does poetry differ from ordinary words? The Dhvanikāra solves this problem by attributing a new function to words in poetry. This function is known as vyāñjanā or suggestion. Words in poetry convey an extra-ordinary beautiful sense, which is distinct from the primary sense of these words. The process of suggestion enables the poet to secure economy in art, and at the same time, endows the sense with a beauty, which is rendered more striking because it is concealed. The Dhvani theorists adopt a very broad and generous outlook. It is true that rasa is the soul of Kāvya, but does Kāvya cease to be Kāvya when a fact or an imaginative idea is suggested by words? The Dhvani theorists, therefore, said that suggested sense may be threefold: rasadhvani, vastudhvani and alañkāradhvani.

Before the advent of the Dhvani theorists, some writers had established alañkāras as the soul of poetry, and some, guṇas as the soul of poetry. The Dhvanikāra did not ignore these earlier theories established by his predecessors as he had fully realized the importance of alañkāras, guṇas and ritis. He examined alañkāras, guṇas and ritis in the light of his own theory and worked out a new scheme, where all the different elements of poetry are systematically and harmoniously assigned their own places. Alañkāras, says the Dhvanikāra, are acceptable only if they form a part and parcel of the poetic expression when the poet's mind is full of emotions. Alañkāras express an idea clearly and pointedly when simple words fail to do so. An object, when described figuratively, is described along with its accessory, with which it is compared, contrasted, or associated. Alañkāras thus present two objects before our eyes and thereby give delight to our fancy. They impart a new colour to an object and shed a new light on it. But alañkāras may also mislead a poet by tempting him to enter into verbal tricks and juggleries. The Dhvanikāra, therefore, warns the poets against displaying their mastery over language by figures like yamaka, especially when they have to depict delicate emotions like love, sorrow or love in separation. Only those alañkāras which do not involve a separate effort on the part of a poet when he is depicting rasa are allowed by the Dhvanikāra. So did he change the concept of guṇas. The guṇas, according to the Dhvanikāra are qualities, not of word and sense, but of rasa.

Another important contribution of the Dhvanikāra was his emphasis on propriety. In poetry, as in life, propriety is essential. A waist-girdle, however beautifully made, arouses laughter if worn around the neck. Likewise poetry loses its grace if the poet lapses into impropriety. The centre of poetry is rasa and the poet has to see that the word, sense, guṇas, alaṅkāras and ritis are all in propriety with the rasa. The element of emotion in poetry is extremely delicate. It is very obvious that an arrangement of soft syllables is very appropriate to the sentiment of love, as in an idyllic image like this :

lalitalavaigalatāpariśīlanakomalamalayasamīre madhukaranikarasmitakokilaguṇjatkūñjakūṇire.

An arrangement of harsh syllables is conducive to the heroic sentiment as in the following :

jyājihvayā valayitokaṭakoṭidaṁṣṭra-mudgārighoraghanaghargharaghoṣam etat | grāsaprasaktahasadantakavaktrayantrajṛmbhāviḍambivikaṭadaracāpam etat ||

The ritis, guṇas and alaṅkāras, therefore, should befit the rasa. The Dhvanikāra, therefore, emphatically says that impropriety is the only cause of rasabhaṅga and that the secret of rasa lies in following the well-known tradition :

*anacūṭyād ṛie nānyad rasabhaṅgasya kāraṇam |
prasiddhoucīyabandhas tu rasasyopaniṣat parā ||*

The theory of Dhvani and the scheme of poetry given by the Dhvanikāra were accepted by almost all his successors. Writers like Kuntaka and Mahimabhaṭṭa did not accept Dhvani and tried to refute it but Abhinavagupta defended the Dhvanikāra and strengthened the theory of Dhvani.

After the Dhvanikāra, Kuntaka established the Vakrokti theory. Though Kuntaka could not attract any followers, his contribution to Ancient Poetics cannot be underestimated. Kuntaka defined poetry as follows:

*śabdārthau sahītau vakrakavivṛtāpāraśālīni |
bandhe vyavasthītau kāvyam tadvidāhlādakārīṇi !'*

Kuntaka is the first to mention kavivṛtāpāra in his definition of poetry. Words and sense in poetry should be an outcome of kavivṛtāpāra and should give delight to the appreciative readers. While the predecessors of Kuntaka almost ignored the poetic experience, Kuntaka brings the poet, the readers and the medium of communication between the poet and the reader – word and sense – in his definition of poetry. The definition given by Kuntaka raises great expectations. But then Kuntaka proceeds to discuss the different mārgas.

The kavivyāpāra then, remains neglected in Ancient Poetics. Writers on Ancient Poetics are not unaware of the importance of the poet. Pratibhā, along with abhyāsa and vyutpatti is considered to be the cause of poetry. Rājasekhara prescribes an elaborate time-table for the poet and describes the ideal conditions for a poet's home, his friends, etc. Vālmiki, again is traditionally described to have transformed his sorrow into verse. Pratibhā is defined by Bhaṭṭa Tauṭa as prajñā nava-navonmeśāśālinī pratibhā matā. Abhinavagupta defines it as apūrvavastu-nirmāṇakṣamā prajñā. Pratibhā then is prajñā. The cause of poetry according to the ancient writers, is the intellect and not the emotion of the poet. Vyutpatti and abhyāsa are then prescribed as the catalysers of pratibhā. The emotional experience of the poet is totally ignored. Is the genuine Kāvya in Rāmāyaṇa the outcome of the profound emotional experience of Vālmiki, or of his intellect, sharpened by vyutpatti and abhyāsa?

By ignoring the emotional experience of the poet, Ancient Poetics became nearly dogmatic. The nine permanent feelings and thirty-three transitory feelings do not cover all the depths and complexities of human nature. Had these permanent feelings and transitory feelings been exhaustive, the standards prescribed by Ancient Poetics should have been universal. Any work of literature, irrespective of its time, place and language then, could have been judged by applying the standards of Ancient Poetics. But these standards are not applicable to some works of literature, which are universally recognised as masterpieces of art. This dogmatism again led to the assertion that hāsyā and karuṇā are contradictory rasas and cannot be depicted together. Some third rasa, which is not opposed to both these should intervene these two rasas. It is, however, a matter of experience that humour and pathos exist side by side in life, and so in literature.

The number of alaṅkāras and the divisions and subdivisions of alaṅkāras are other results of ignoring poetic experience. Bharata gives only four alaṅkāras and their number gradually increased. Jagannātha says that pratibhā may be acquired by vyutpatti and abhyāsa. Pratibhā, according to the later writers, is the imagination of the poet; an alaṅkārakāvya, then, is imaginative poetry as alaṅkāras are only kavi-pratibhanirvartyāḥ. The ancient writers however, have attempted to measure the immeasurable world of imagination by prescribing alaṅkāras. The subjective aspect of pratibhā is ignored, and consequently, the emotional aspect of the figures, emphasized by the Dhvanikāra is lost sight of. As only the intellectual aspect of the figures is taken into account, figures like upamā, rūpaka, utprekṣā, samāsokti and virodha are divided and subdivided. Some of the divisions are based purely on grammar. The love for dogmatism is carried to its climax in the divisions of upamā, like kyacgā, kyaniggā, karīṇamulgā, karmaṇamulgā or of virodha like jātijātyoḥ virodaḥ and gunaguṇayoḥ virodaḥ. Can we say that Kālidāsa contrived a virodha between two actions when he said śailādhirājatanayā na yayau na tasthau? The bashfulness, astonishment, love and so many indescribable feelings of Umā are expressed by Kālidāsa in the above line and he was surely not conscious of the grammatical aspect of the virodha, when the words came to him. Figurative language is the poet's endeavour to give an artistic shape to his emotions. Instead of describing the emotions directly, the poet conveys them through images or alaṅkāras.

Ancient Poetics then, with its keen sense for the good and the beautiful, ignores the poet. Poetry according to the ancient writers was more a matter of head than of heart. The dogmatism of Ancient Poetics endowed Sanskrit literature with artificiality. Poetry, for the poet, became a means for displaying mastery over language, grammar and rhetoric. Poets like Śrīharṣa, Māgha and Bhāravi concentrated their abilities on the achievement of an artificial style, and thus, subordinated their saṃvedana to uktivaicitrya.

VIJÑĀNEŚVARA AND NILAKAṆṬHA AS THE INTERPRETERS OF THE YĀJÑAVALKYA-SMṚTI

Even though it is true that Vijñāneśvara has written a commentary known as Mitākṣarā on the Yājñavalkya-smṛti (YS), yet it is in the nature of a digest. In his commentary, Vijñāneśvara has collected all the smṛti dicta available to him to arrive at a definite conclusion by removing contradiction on the basis of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā rules of interpretations framed by Jaimini. The digest of Nīlakaṇṭha, as the name suggests, also belongs to the same category, but it is voluminous as compared with the commentary Mitākṣarā of Vijñāneśvara on YS. In this paper an attempt is made to make a comparison between these two masters in the light of their comments from the Mīmāṃsā points of view on the verses of YS. Incidentally, it may be made clear that I am going to make casual references to the verses from the Manu-smṛti, on which these two masters have made their observations from the Mīmāṃsā points of view only to cite them as the authorities for my observations in this respect.

Over and above, it can be made succinctly clear that the digest of Nīlakaṇṭha does not profess to be a thorough going and critical commentary on YS. In spite of this, Nīlakaṇṭha has time and again referred to the verses of YS in the course of his discussion. In the light of this background, the comparison between these two authors is here intended.

I. There are some places in YS which are not at all touched by Vijñāneśvara in his Mīmāṃsā comments, but suggested by Nīlakaṇṭha. These are the places of YS, where Vijñāneśvara, being a profound Mīmāṃsaka, ought to have introduced Mīmāṃsā points :

While discussing the topic of the shares of members of the joint family Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a verse from YS. II. 139 and says that in interpreting this text, we will have to construe the expression asaṃsrṣṭy api ca ādadyāt with the preceding clause anyodaryas tu saṃsrṣṭi, etc., and also with the succeeding clause. Thus, the above expression serves the double purpose. Nīlakaṇṭha has used here the principle of the Dehalīdīpaka-nyāya.¹ But this principle is not at all used by Vijñāneśvara in his comments on YS.

While discussing the topic of the expiation for drinking wine, Nīlakaṇṭha refers to YS. III. 254. In this verse, the expression samāḥ niśi occurs. Here a drinker of wine is asked to eat ground grains of rice for many years at night. The word samāḥ is in the plural number. The proper application of the principle of the Kapīñjala-nyāya, to the present case, makes it clear that a wine drinker should eat ground grains of rice for three years and not more, at night. This discussion occurs in the *Prāyaścitta-mayūkha*² of Nīlakaṇṭha. This is a place where a careful student of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā would hope that Vijñāneśvara ought to have applied the principle of the Kapīñjala-nyāya. But it appears that he has not used it. Incidentally it may be pointed out that Vijñāneśvara has made use of the principle of the Kapīñjala-nyāya in the course of his explanation on YS. III. 30.

I here cite a few more instances where Nīlakaṇṭha has used the Mīmāṃsā points and Vijñāneśvara is silent. Nīlakaṇṭha has used the principle of Nityānuvāda on YS. II. 175 (202 V.M.), Uddeśyagatam viśeṣaṃ avivakṣitam on YS. II. 121 (90 V.M.), Paryudāsa on III. 219 (2 Prāyaścitta-mayūkha), Arthavāda on III. 228, Vācanikātideśa on III. 231 (165 Prāyaścitta-mayūkha), Upalakṣaṇa on III. 292, III. 15, Samuccaya on I. 280 and III. 289 (179 and 237 Prāyaścitta-mayūkha), Śāmyātideśa on I. 243 (98 Śrāddha-mayūkha), Parisaṃkhyā on I. 236 (80 Śrāddha-mayūkha), Kāṇḍānusamaya on I. 231 (78 Śrāddha-mayūkha), Anuvāda on I. 85 (113 Vyavahāra-mayūkha), etc.

II. There are some important places of the Mitākṣarā on YS where a curious reader would hope to find some important Mīmāṃsā comments of Nīlakaṇṭha. But in this respect, the reader is utterly disappointed by Nīlakaṇṭha, the author of 12 Mayūkhās. These are the important places of YS, that are touched by Vijñāneśvara and not by Nīlakaṇṭha.

1. atrānyodaryūnyamūtrjādīpadair na sāpatno bhrātaivocyate. kiṃ tu pitṛyūcdir upi..... asaṃsrṣṭy api ihi dehalīdīpavat pūrvottarapadābhyām anveti, YS, Vyavahāra-mayūkha, p. 149, Nirṇaya Sāgara edition, 1936.

2. pare samā niśi iti bahuvacanāntam peṭhuḥ. tatra kapīñjalanyūyenādātrayaṃ sambhavati, ibid. Prāyaścitta-mayūkha, p. 102.

Vijñāneśvara has introduced a hair-splitting discussion on YS. I. 81 as to whether this is a case of niyama or parisaṃkhyā, and after a hot debate, concludes that this is a case of niyama. This is a place which is not at all handled or touched by Nīlakaṇṭha at great length in his discussion. It may also be significantly pointed out here that in the Ācāra-mayūkha Nīlakaṇṭha casually refers to this opinion of Vijñāneśvara, without mentioning his name³.

Vijñāneśvara in his comments on YS. I. 256, has introduced a hair-splitting discussion on the topic of the pārvaṇa mode of śrāddha and ekoddiṣṭa mode of śrāddha. This is a place where Vijñāneśvara has criticised the view points of southerners, northerners and the two other view points. Any one would have expected the comments of Nīlakaṇṭha on this technical point. But the readers are again disappointed. In order to arrive at the definite conclusion, Nīlakaṇṭha has relied on the principles of Upasaṃhāra and the Vyavasthitavikalpa in the course of his discussion.

Moreover, Vijñāneśvara has employed the principle of Dvayoḥ prañayanti on YS. II. 135. Here the line under discussion is 'patni duhitaraś caiva' which introduces the hair-splitting discussion. Nīlakaṇṭha has not opened such discussion in his Śrāddha-mayūkha either to make vital suggestion in the matter or to find fault with Vijñāneśvara. It is Mitramiśra, the author of Vīramitrodaya, who has used the same maxim of Dvayoḥ prañayanti in the discussion of his Vyavahāraprakāśa.

III. At times, however, Vijñāneśvara is closely followed by Nīlakaṇṭha in the course of his discussion on YS.

While discussing the topic of worship of the brahmins invited for the śrāddha ceremony, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a line from YS I. 231. Now the question arises whether udakam, gandham, mālyam, dhūpam and dīpam are to be offered to the Daiva and Pitrya brahmins by the mode of Padārthānusamaya or by kāṇḍānusamaya. Nīlakaṇṭha, however, holds that these may be offered to the brahmins, representing the manes, by the mode of kāṇḍānusamaya.⁴ Nīlakaṇṭha further quotes a line from YS and points out that on account of the word tatcā, Mādhava and

3. atra pūrvārdhe kāladvayaviśiṣṭabhojanakriyāyāḥ eva niyamavidheḥ soḍaśartu-niśāḥ strīṇāṃ tasmīn yugmāsu saṃviśet itivat, ibid. Ācāra-mayūkha, p. 111.

4. evam āsanādīn vāsontān pitrye 'pi tathaiva tān kuryāt, ibid. Śrāddha-mayūkha, p. 78.

Vijñāneśvara hold that these things may be offered by the mode of kāṇḍānusamaya.⁵

In the course of his discussion on the Śrāddha-mayūkha, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a verse from YS I. 236. This verse lays down that the yajamāna should bring the food mixed with ghee and ask the permission from the brahmins for offering it into the fire. In this verse, the expression ghṛtaplutam annam occurs. While commenting on this verse, Nīlakaṇṭha⁶ quotes the opinion of the commentator of YS (i.e., Vijñāneśvara) who holds that the expression ghṛtaplutam indicates parisaṃkhyā and by this word, the other things like śāka, etc., are excluded. Here it is important to note that Vijñāneśvara has not used the term parisaṃkhyā but the sense of parisaṃkhyā is conveyed by his significant remark.⁷

IV. Sometimes, however, when there is a difference of opinion among the writers on the Dharma-śāstra on any Mīmāṃsā technical point Nīlakaṇṭha agrees with Vijñāneśvara.

While discussing the topic of pātityahetavaḥ, i.e., the causes of becoming outcaste, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a verse from the Manu-smṛiti. This verse means that if the wife of a person drinks wine, then his half body becomes patita (outcaste). And when his half-body has thus become patita, no expiation is laid down for that case. Now the question arises whether the prohibition of drinking wine is laid down with reference to the brahmin-wife of a brahmin-husband or whether with reference to a śūdra-wife of a brahmin-husband. Here Nīlakaṇṭha cites the two divergent opinions of Vijñāneśvara and Mādhava. Vijñāneśvara holds that the text is applicable to the case of a śūdra-wife of a brahmin-husband; while according to Mādhava, the prohibition (nīṣedha), in Manu's text refers to the brahmin-wife of a brahmin-husband. Nīlakaṇṭha, however, sides with Vijñāneśvara and rightly points out that if the interpretation as suggested by Mādhava is accepted, then there would arise the contingency of the statement being redundant. And there would be one more difficulty in dissolving the expression patitā-rddhaśarirasya as the bahuvrīhi compound. Thus, this is a case of nīṣ-dha in the case of drinking wine by a śūdra-wife of a brahmin-husband. Here it is pertinent to note that both Mādhava and Vijñāneśvara treat the text of Manu as indicative of nīṣedha but interpret the same rather differently.

5. atra tataḥ ity anena vaiśvadevikapadārthakāṇḍottaram pitryarcanavidhānāt kāṇḍānusamayo gamyata iti mādhavavijñāneśvarūdayaḥ, ibid.

6. ghṛtapadena śākādi pārisaṃkhyeti vijñāneśvaraḥ, ibid. p. 80.

7. ghṛtagrahaṇam sūpaśākādi nivr̥ttyartham, ibid.

But Nīlakaṇṭha agrees with Vijñāneśvara in his discussion in the Prāyaścitta-mayūkha.⁸

V. Very often does Nīlakaṇṭha disagree with Vijñāneśvara on some Mīmāṃsā technical points and expressly criticizes the view point of the latter.

While discussing the topic of succession to the property of a reunited member of the joint Hindu family, Nīlakaṇṭha refers to the view point of Vijñāneśvara who understands the line saṃsṛṣṭīnas tu saṃsṛṣṭi, etc., of YS. II. 138 by making the anuṣaṅga of the words svaryātasya and aputrasya occurring in YS. II. 135. Nīlakaṇṭha does not agree with Vijñāneśvara and holds that this is not a fit case of anuṣaṅga inasmuch as even without making the anuṣaṅga of the words, the required results can be obtained. On the contrary, if we resort to anuṣaṅga the following absurd results would follow. If aputrasya is connected as applied, then the result would be that of two sons or a son and a grandson, one of whom is reunited with the father, and the other is not reunited both will be entitled to the same share on their father's death. And this verse will have no application to a deceased reunited member who dies leaving sons. And this would be opposed to popular usage. Besides, the required results can be obtained by referring to the text of Vṛddha Manu in respect of svaryātasya and secondly by referring to the latter part of the stanza in respect of aputrasya. This discussion takes place in the Vyavahāra-mayūkha.⁹

Over and above, while discussing the topic of the line of succession to the property of a deceased person, Nīlakaṇṭha refers to YS. II. 135. In this verse, the word bhrātaraḥ occurs. Vijñāneśvara understands the word bhrātā in two senses: 1) full-brother and 2) half-brother. According to Vijñāneśvara, the full-brother will succeed to the property of a deceased person. And in his default, the half-brother would succeed. The above mode of interpretation as suggested by Vijñāneśvara, will involve the serious fault of Vṛttidvayavirodhā according to Nīlakaṇṭha. This discussion takes place in the Vyavahāra-mayūkha.¹⁰

8. dvijātibhāryāyāḥ śūdrāyāḥ surcāpānanīṣedhārtham idam iti vijñāneśvaraḥ. mādhas tu brāhmaṇyūcīnām apy ayam nīṣedhaḥato vijñāneśvara eva samyag ūce, ibid, Prāyaścitta-mayūkha, p. 63.

9. saṃsṛṣṭīnas tu sa saṃsṛṣṭī sodarasya tu sodaraḥ....tena vināpi gatau sambhavantiyām anuṣaṅge mānābhāvāt, ibid. Vyavahāra-mayūkha, p. 147.

10. mātur abhāve bhrātā sodaraḥ. tababhāve ta'putraḥ.....ca gaṇyā vṛttidvayavirodhāt, ibid. p. 142.

Moreover, Nīlakaṇṭha does not agree with Vijñāneśvara in interpreting the text of Manu IX. 192, whether the sons and daughters – together succeed to the estate of a deceased woman (stridhana). Here, according to Vijñāneśvara sāhitya togetherness (close contiguity) is not intended. But Nīlakaṇṭha quotes the view point of the Dāyabhāga school that sāhitya is intended between the sons and daughters that succeed to the estate of a deceased woman. This discussion takes place in the Vyavahāra-mayūkha.¹¹

VI. At times, however, on one and the same Mīmāṃsā technical point, both the authors are diametrically opposed to each other.

While interpreting the text of YS. I. 53, Vijñāneśvara suggests that the prohibition of the marriage with a sickly girl is a case of puruṣārtha. While Nīlakaṇṭha thinks that this is a case of *kratvartha*¹² and if violating the rule of YS, the marriage takes place, then the man concerned suffers not only from the seen results but also from the unseen results.

While discussing the topic of adoption, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a verse from Manu IX. 168, in which it is laid down that the son should be given in adoption by the parents, when the adopting person is in distress. The word, āpad occurring in it, indicates that this is a case of puruṣārtha according to Vijñāneśvara. Vijñāneśvara further holds that the prohibition as regards anāpadi dattakadāna, affects only the giver and not the receiver. As opposed to this, Nīlakaṇṭha holds that the prohibition as regards anāpadi dattakadāna (i.e., when the adopting person is not in distress) is a case of kratvartha.¹³ If violating the rule of Manu, the adoption takes place, then it will become vitiated. This discussion takes place in the Vyavahāra-mayūkha. According to Nīlakaṇṭha, Vijñāneśvara is wrong in holding the view that anāpadi dattakadāna is a case of puruṣārtha. Likewise, Vijñāneśvara and Nīlakaṇṭha are diametrically opposed to each other on so many other points.

VII. At times, we fail to understand the name of the persons whose opinion, both Vijñāneśvara and Nīlakaṇṭha are trying to refer when they employ the words iti eke and anye, etc.

11. yatra duhitrādya abhāvena putrāṇām eva sāhityenādādhikāraḥ..... sāhityam vidhiyate iti āhuḥ, ibid. p. 158.
 12. yad api vivāhaprakaraṇe tenaivoktaṁ.....dānavidhāyakatvābhāvāt, ibid. p. 108.
 13. yad api niṣedho dōtur eva puruṣārtho na kratvarthaḥ iti vijñāneśvaraḥ tan na, ibid. p. 107.

In his commentary on YS. I. 103, Vijñāneśvara refers to the opinion of some¹⁴ whom he is trying to criticize. Dr. P.S. Sane suggests that these are the view points of the Smṛtyarthisāra and Laghu-Āśvalāyana. In the course of his discussion in the Prāyaścittamayūkha, when the topic of expiation to be performed by a woman leading immoral life was under consideration, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a verse from Manu and says that whatever is the expiation laid down for men approaching the women of other castes is laid down, the same is to be extended to the case of women leading immoral life. According to some writers¹⁵ on the Dharma-śāstra, even though this is a fit case of Vācanikātideśa, yet the expiation which a woman is required to perform should be less by one quarter of the expiation a man is required to observe. Here Nīlakaṇṭha does not state the name of the person whom he is referring to. We get another example of this kind in the discussion on the Samaya-mayūkha, p. 187.

VIII. At times, after citing the two divergent opinions on the matter under discussion Nīlakaṇṭha passes over the point in silence. But we do not come across such a case in the scholarly commentary of Vijñāneśvara on YS.

In the course of his discussion on the topic of expiation to be performed by a man in the case of his eating impure things of his body, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes a verse from Manu V. 134, which states that the second thread ceremony is necessary. Now the important question is whether this is an independent expiation or whether it is to be combined with the other expiation. Here Nīlakaṇṭha cites the two divergent opinions of Śūlapāṇi and others. Śūlapāṇi holds that the second thread ceremony is to be combined with the other expiations; while others hold that this is an independent expiation. Here Nīlakaṇṭha passes over this point in silence. This discussion takes place in the Prāyaścitta-mayūkha.¹⁶ We get another example of this variety in the discussion on the Samaya-mayūkha, p. 187.

IX. Some times, however, on some technical Mīmāṃsā point, Nīlakaṇṭha agrees virtually with Vijñāneśvara, though the former has not employed one and the same Mīmāṃsā principle to arrive at a definite conclusion on the point at issue.

14. iha kecid vaiśvadevākhyasya karmaṇaḥ puruṣārthatvam annasaṃskārakarmatvam cecchanti..... parasparavirodhāt puruṣārthatvam eva yuktam, ibid. p. 33.

15. etac ca vācanikātideśāt pādonam iti kecī. pūrṇam eva tu yuktam, ibid. Prāyaścitta-mayūkha, p. 165.

16. punaḥ saṃskāraḥ punar upanayanam. idaṃ ca prāṭisvikaiḥ śrīramalal.hakṣa-naprāyaścittaiḥ samuccīyata iti śūlapāṇiḥ svatantram eva prāyaścittam ity anye, ibid. p. 114.

This point can be illustrated by pointing that Vijñāneśvara in his commentary on YS. I. 103, holds that the Vaiśvadeva rite is meant for the beneficial interest of men. It is a case of *puruṣārtha*¹⁷ and not of kratvartha. Vijñāneśvara holds that had the Vaiśvadeva rite been a case of kratvartha, then for every additional cooking, the performance of the Vaiśvadeva rite would have become necessary. But this is not the case.

In his discussion on the Ācāra-mayūkha, while discussing the performance of five great sacrifices, Nilakaṇṭha points out the principle¹⁸ that Pratipradhānam guṇāvṛttiḥ is inapplicable to the repetition of the Vaiśvadeva rite for every additional fresh cooking. Here it appears that Nilakaṇṭha also sides with Vijñāneśvara in holding that the performance of the Vaiśvadeva rite is for the beneficial interest of men. It is important to note that the two authors have not used one and the same principle. Vijñāneśvara has used the Mīmāṃsā principle of kratvartha and puruṣārtha and Nilakaṇṭha has applied the doctrine of pratipradhānam guṇāvṛttiḥ to show that the repetition of the Vaiśvadeva rite is not necessary.

X. Both the authors go to the root of the subject of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā and make their valuable comments on the Mīmāṃsā technical points that occur in the course of their discussion.

Vijñāneśvara in his commentary on YS. I. 256, introduces a discussion on the Mīmāṃsā technical term upasaṃhāra and also takes pretty care to give the proper illustration of the term upasaṃhāra.¹⁹ Nilakaṇṭha also in his discussion on the Prāyaścitta-mayūkha throws a flood of light on the technical terms prasaṅga, and *tantratā*²¹ It seems proper

19. yathā saptadaśasāmīdhenīr anubrūyād ity anārabhyādhītasya vikṛtimātraviṣayaśya..... sambandhabodhanārthavatā upasaṃhāraḥ, ibid. p. 84.

20. tatra viśeṣagrahaṇe sakṛd anuṣṭhānam prasaṅgaḥ, ibid, Prāyaścitta-mayūkha, p. 13.

to note here that whatever light Nīlakaṇṭha has thrown on the Mīmāṃsā technical terms in the course of his discussion is not intended strictly while commenting on the verses of YS or the Manu-smṛiti.

XI. Being bred in an atmosphere redolent with the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā system, Vijñāneśvara very minutely, detects the flaw in the argument of the opponent and also in the illustration cited by the opponent and at the same time shows his ability to give a proper illustration of the technical point under discussion. Though Nīlakaṇṭha, is also sufficiently clever enough to detect the flaw in the argument of the opponent, he does not always cite the fitting or proper example of the Mīmāṃsā point at issue. This can be well illustrated by pointing out the illustration of the commentary of Vijñāneśvara on YS. I. 81, regarding the point and illustration of Vidhyānuvādivirodha.²² This point can be further clarified by referring to the commentary of Vijñāneśvara when he takes good care to point out the opponent the proper example of the conflict between the text of Arthaśāstra and the Dharma-śāstra.²³ In the case of Nīlakaṇṭha, it may be simply noted that he will not enter into the hair-splitting discussion of the topic but remain contented with citing or pointing out the flaw in the argument of Vijñāneśvara on the ground of Vṛttidvayavirodha, Vākyabheda, etc., and will not show the acuteness of intellect by citing the proper example of the point under consideration.

XII. Vijñāneśvara has largely influenced Haradatta who in his turn has influenced Nīlakaṇṭha in this field.

Vijñāneśvara in his commentary on YS. III. 265 has suggested that there should be the deduction of something from the original case (prakṛti) to the extended case (vikṛti), when the details of the prakṛti are transferred to the vikṛti by the rule of transfer (atideśa).²⁴ Haradatta in his commentary on the Āpastamba-dharma-sūtra I. 8. 26. 5, suggests that in the extended case (vikṛti) one half of the original (prakṛti) should be adopted following the principle of the Smārta-nyāya.²⁵ Nīlakaṇṭha has borne this principle in mind and utilised it properly in his discussion on the Prāyaścitta-mayūkha by introducing the three varieties of atideśa –

22. tatra hi vidhyānuvādivirodho yatra vidheyāvadhitayā tad evānuvāditavyam phaloddeśena vidhātavyaś ceti, ibid, 23.

23. hiraṇyabhūmilābhebhya mitralabdhir varā yata..... balavat, ibid. p. 133.

24. atrātideśasāmarthyād gocarmavasānagoparicaryādibhir gaunāvadhāsūdhārāṇaḥ katipayair nyūnatvam avagamyate, ibid. p. 423.

25. atideśeṣu cārddham prāpyata iti smārto nyāyas tena strīṇām ardhaprāptyartha ḥ vacanam iti, Āpastamba-dharma-sūtra, p. 146.

vācanika, tādrūpya and sāmya. This evolution of the idea of deducing something from the original case to the extended case is to be borne in mind by a careful student of the works of Nīlakaṇṭha, Vijñāneśvara and Haradatta.

XIII. In his exposition of the topic, Vijñāneśvara is always very succinct and clear and easy to follow. But at times, we do not get clear cut idea about the view point of Nīlakaṇṭha. In fact, Nīlakaṇṭha tries to confuse us in the matter under discussion.

This point can be clarified by citing the example from the Vyavahāra-mayūkha. While discussing the topic of adoption, Nīlakaṇṭha quotes Manu IX. 168 and does not clarify his position as to whether the giving of the son in adoption when the adopting person is not in distress is a case of puruṣārtha or kratvartha and whether any sin (pratyavāya) would incur by violating the rule laid down by the text of Manu.²¹

Conclusion: One will have to admit that Nīlakaṇṭha has suggested the Mīmāṃsā points on those places of YS that are not at all handled by Vijñāneśvara. Also there are some important places of the Mitākṣarā on YS, where a curious reader of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā would hope to find some new point of view of the author of twelve Mayūkhās. But in this respect, it is evident, that the readers are disappointed by Nīlakaṇṭha. Vijñāneśvara is closely followed by Nīlakaṇṭha in his discussion on the Mayūkhās. At times, however, when there is a difference of opinion among the writers on the Dharma-śāstra on one and the same Mīmāṃsā technical point, Nīlakaṇṭha agrees well with Vijñāneśvara. Nīlakaṇṭha is bold enough to show his difference of opinion with Vijñāneśvara on some of the technical points of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā; in fact Nīlakaṇṭha is diametrically opposed to Vijñāneśvara. Very often does Nīlakaṇṭha criticize the author of the Mitākṣarā on some of the technical Mīmāṃsā points. Sometimes, however, the readers are unable to make out whose opinion these two authors are trying to refer to. This is due to the fact that both the authors in the course of their discussion, make a reference to the other writers on the Dharma-śāstra with the expression iti eke or iti anye. At times, after citing the two divergent opinions on one and the same point under discussion, Nīlakaṇṭha passes over the point in silence. But Vijñāneśvara is not found to have indulged in such things. Sometimes, however, it can be easily noticed by a careful reader that though Nīlakaṇṭha virtually agrees with Vijñāneśvara on some of the Mīmāṃsā technical points yet he does not use the same technical term used by Vijñāneśvara in the course of his discussion. Both the authors go to the root of the subject of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā and offer their own comments on the Mīmāṃsā technical points. Vijñāneśvara, at times, shows more acuteness and minuteness of intellect in finding fault with the argument and illustration of the opponent and at the same time takes care to substitute the proper Mīmāṃsā example of the point at issue. A careful student of the comparative study of Vijñāneśvara, Haradatta and Nīlakaṇṭha will not fail to note the evolution of the technical term atideśa and its due application as done by these authors to the domain of the Dharma-śāstra. Lastly one will have to make a note of the point that Nīlakaṇṭha is not as clear and explicit as Vijñāneśvara is in the matter of exposition of the topic under discussion. In a nutshell, the utility and supreme importance of Vijñāneśvara and Nīlakaṇṭha for a proper understanding of YS from the Mīmāṃsā point of view can hardly be gainsaid taking into account the relative greatness and superiority and inferiority of both these masters in different aspects as revealed above.

26. atra sāmyāvideśe 'rdham, tādrūpyavācanikayos tu pādonam, YS. Prāyaścitta-mayūkha, p. 14.

27. asya vākyād adṛṣṭārthatayā kratvarthatvāvagamāt. kathañcid dṛṣṭārthatve 'pi va niyamādṛṣṭasya āvश्यकत्वान् na tadatikrame kāryaviśeṣaprayojakādṛṣṭasiddhiḥ.....āpadt putradāne pratyavāyāpaitiḥ, ibid, Vyavahāra-mayūkha, pp. 107-8.

Dr. J. CHENNA REDDY

ON THE AUTHORSHIP OF YAJÑAPHALANĀṬAKA*

It is in 1912 that Mahāmahopādhyāya Ganapati Sastri brought to light and published for the first time thirteen Sanskrit plays under 'Trivandrum Sanskrit Series' and ascribed all of them to Bhāsa, though in none of them the name of the author was mentioned. To substantiate his decision he has enumerated with sufficient explanatory notes, many common features that are present in all those plays. Some of them are the following :

- 1) Every play begins with the words nāndyante tataḥ praviśati sūtradhāraḥ.
- 2) In majority of the plays the Nāndi-sloka contains mudrālāṅkāra.
- 3) The word sthāpanā is used invariably for prastāvanā and every one of them is unusually brief and short.
- 4) The expression 'evam āryamiśrān vijñāpayāmi; aye! kiṃ nu khalu mayi vijñāpanavyagre śabda iva śrūyate, aṅga! paśyāmi' immediately follows the Nāndi in all the plays.
- 5) The name Rājasimha occurs in the bharatavākya of almost all the plays and even that bharatavākya is almost the same in all the plays.
- 6) The twin words niṣkramya and praviśya are frequently used to denote the exit and the entrance respectively of a character without allowing reasonable interval between the two expressions.
- 7) The name of the pratihārī is Vijayā in all the plays.

*A paper read in the All-India Oriental Conference - Twentyfifth (Silver Jubilee) Session at Jadavpur University, Calcutta, on 31-10-1969.

- 8) The non-observance of the rules of grammar as prescribed by Pāṇini or the rules of dramaturgy formulated by sage Bharata is noticed very often.

Many of the above common features have been recognised by Bāṇa and some other poets as to pertain to the plays of Bhāsa. Some of the verses quoted as examples in authoritative works on poetics ascribing them to Bhāsa by the authors of those works are identified in one or two of the plays of this group. So M. M. Ganapati Sastri has rightly ascribed all the thirteen plays to Bhāsa which group is commonly known as Bhāsanāṭakakakra.

The plays forming Bhāsanāṭakakakra are the following :

- I. Pratimā and Abhiṣeka – based on Rāmāyaṇa story,
- II. a) Madhyamavyāyoga, Pañcarātram, Dūtavākyaṃ, Dūtaghaṭṭakam, Karṇabhāram and Ūrubhaṅgam based on Mahābhārata story which group includes
b) Bālacaritam also as it is based on Harivaṃśa – a khilabhāga (appendage) of Mahābhārata,
- III. Pratiṣṭhāyauḡandharāyaṇam, Svapnavāsavadattam and Avimārakam based on (Bṛhat) Kathā literature which is a combination of history and legend, and
- IV. Cārudattam – an incomplete play with a social theme of Bhāsa's creation.

In 1941, Sri Rajavaidya Jivarama Kalidasa Sastri from Gondal published a play entitled Yajñaphala in Sanskrit ascribing it to Bhāsa. He has given in his introduction four epithets to substantiate Bhāsa's authorship of the play. They are

1. bhāṣāyā atiprācīnasamskṛtatvāt, 2. vastukalpanāyāḥ śreṣṭhatvāt,
3. rasabhāṣālaṅkāraṇāṭyaṅgānām manoharatamavāt, and
4. bhāṣādivarṇitānekasāmānyabhāsanāṭaka-saṃvāditvāc ca

curiously enough this play possesses almost all the features which M.M. Ganapati Sastri enumerated as common features to Bhāsa's plays.

Yajñaphala is based on Rāmāyaṇa story. It contains the story of Śrīrāma upto his marriage with Sītā. The after effects or the results of three yajñas (sacrifices) play very important role in this play. The birth of Śrīrāma is the result of the yajña of Daśaratha, the acquisition of celestial (divya) weapons by Śrīrāma and Lakṣmaṇa is the result of the yajña of Viśvāmitra and the visit of Śrīrāma to Mithila leading to his marriage with Sītā is the result of the yajña of Janaka. Hence the play is named Yajñaphala having these facts in mind. Even the play Abhiṣeka is named only on this principle. That play has three important events, i.e. the three abhiṣekas, namely 1) the abhiṣeka of Sugrīva to the kingdom of Kiṣkindha, 2) the abhiṣeka of Vibhīṣaṇa to the kingdom of Laṅka and 3) the abhiṣeka of Śrīrāma to the kingdom of Kosala (Ayodhya). All the above features in Yajñaphala make one believe that the play is really written by Bhāsa. By looking at the play only superficially, great scholars like Dr. Pusalkar from Poona (in chapter VI of Bhāsa – A study and S. N. Sinha from Bangalore (in Introduction to Pañcarātram) subscribed to the findings of Sri Kalidasa Sastri. But on close examination one can very easily repudiate the authorship of Yajñaphala as ascribed to Bhāsa. Dr. Pusalkar published his revised opinion in this regard in his recent article.

Pratimā contains the story covering Ayodhyā, Arcṇya and Yuddha kāṇḍas of Vālmiki-Rāmāyaṇa and Abhiṣeka contains the story of Kiṣkindha and Sundara kāṇḍas. So in the Rāmāyaṇa plays of Bhāsanāṭakacakra, only the story of Bāla-kāṇḍa of Vālmiki-Rāmāyaṇa remains untouched by Bhāsa. Hence it is believed that birth of Yajñaphalanāṭaka is to fill up that gap in the Rāmāyaṇa story. Now let us examine whether Bhāsa himself wrote that play or somebody else did it.

Yajñaphala contains seven acts. In, act I Daśaratha performs yajña and begets four sons as a result. He celebrates the birth of his sons in a fitting manner and takes a vow to bestow special care on their education. He decides to meet his wives in a garden at midnight of next day. In act II, Daśaratha meets his wives as indicated in the previous act and consults them how best he can select a successor to the throne. In a strategic way he makes Kaikeyī herself to propose Śrīrāma as heir apparent. But Vidūṣaka in his customary blab indicates future calamity through Kaikeyī's trecherous plan. In act III, Rāvaṇa visits Ayodhyā in order to assess the physical strength of Śrīrāma. At the same time Viśvāmitra also comes to Ayodhyā to request King Daśaratha to depute Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa along with him to protect his yajña from the onslaughts of Rākṣasas. Mantharā decides to poison the mind of Kaikeyī against Śrīrāma's prospects. In Act IV, Viśvāmitra obtains permission of Daśaratha to take Śrīrāma and Lakṣmaṇa with him. In Act V, Tāṭakā and Subāhu were slain and Mārīca is flung afar into an ocean. The sacrifice end sauspiciously, Śrīrāma and Lakṣmaṇa are presented with rare and divine weapons (asirās) by Viśvāmitra. On the pretext of witnessing the yajña of Janaka, Viśvāmitra takes Śrīrāma and Lakṣmaṇa to Mithila. In Act VI, Śrīrāma and Sītā are made to meet in a garden only to fall in love with each other at first sight. Janaka decides upon the marriages of his daughters with the visiting princes and extends invitation to Daśaratha. In Act VII, the marriages of four princes were performed. The pride of Paraśurāma is brought down and the play ends.

I strongly believe that some poet of mediaeval times has taken fancy to write Yajñaphala-nāṭaka incorporating the story of Bāla-kāṇḍa and to circulate it in the name of Bhāsa only to make scholars believe that Bhāsa has dramatised entire Rāmāyaṇa. The episode of Pandita Gopala Datta Sastri of Jaipur as narrated by Prof. R.N. Dandekar in his article 'Authorship of Yajñaphala' published in vol. XXXI (1950) of Annals of Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona, is a monumental example of such a possibility. He might have taken advantage of or inspiration from a śloka quoted by Viśvanātha as an example to vidhāna, an aspect of mukhasandhi under kārikā 85 in the sixth Pariccheda of Sāhitya-darpaṇa and ascribed it to Bhāsa. The śloka reads thus — utsāhātīsayam vatsa! tava bālyam ca paśyataḥ |

mama harṣaviṣādābhyāṃ ākrāntaṃ yugapan manaḥ. ||

The context of this verse is supposed to be from a scene wherein Paraśurāma and Srīrāma meet in Mithila. This gives an impression that Bhāsa has also written a play incorporating the story of Bāla-kāṇḍa of Vālmiki-Rāmāyaṇa. This śloka might have been in circulation even before Viśvanātha quoted it.

The following are the verses in Yajñaphala which were stale imitations to Kālidāsa's verses. Any scholar possessing an average critical outlook will detect this fact. I do not hesitate to go a step further and proclaim that the author of Yajñaphala has artificially created these situations only to find an opportunity to compose the verses in imitation to Kālidāsa's verses. Only a few examples I am giving hereunder :

- 1) Sumantra says at the time of celebrating the birth day of the princes

samrāḍ eva sutodayena vihito muktaḥ pīṭhām ṛṇāt | pañtryāḍ ṛṇād āsa bhavān nibaddho mokṣas tato 'bhūd bhavatas tu tasmāt || Yajña. I

This expression is an imitation to the following verse of Kālidāsa on the birth of Raghu na saṃyutas tasya babhūva rakṣitur visarjayed yaṃ sutajanmaharṣitaḥ | ṛṇābhīdhānāt svayam eva kevalam tadā pīṭhām mumuce sa bandhanāt || Raghu. III. 20.

- 2) Daśaratha says to Vidūṣaka

*kva nṛpatvam analpaviplavam kva kumārāḥ sukumāracetasaḥ |
parihāsavijalpitaṁ tv idam paramārthaṁ na hi manyatām vacaḥ ||*

Yajña. II. 41.

This verse is an imitation to Kālidāsa's verse

*kva vayaṁ kva parokṣamanmathaḥ mṛgaśābais samam edhito janaḥ |
parihāsavijalpitaṁ sakhe paramārthena na gṛhyatām voçaḥ ||*

Śāk. II. 18.

- 3) Bharata prays to Śrīrāma to desist from aiming an arrow at a tree

na khalu na khalu vadhyaḥ pakṣiṇo 'nāgasas te saha prthukakalatraiḥ tatra vāsaḥ kṛtas taiḥ | kva bata vihagadehāś cañcalā lāghavena kva punar āsanikalpā mṛtyudūtāś śarās te ||

Yajña. III. 38.

This is also an imitation to Kālidāsa's verse

na khalu na khalu bāṇas saṁnipātyo 'yam asmīn mṛdunī mṛgaśarīre puṣpaśāśv ivāgnih | kva bata hariṇakānāṁ jivitaṁ cātīlolaṁ kva ca nīśitanipātā vajrasārāś śarās te ||

Śāk. I. 10.

- 4) Śrīrāma thinks within himself on seeing Sītā in a garden

*naivāgamyā na duṣprāpā yanmano me 'tra dhāvati |
kṛtyākṛtyaviveke tu pramāṇaṁ hi satām manaḥ ||*

Yajña. VI. 18.

This is also an imitation to Kālidāsa's verse

*asaṁśayaṁ kṣatraparigrahakṣamā
yad āryam asyām abhilāṣi me manaḥ | satām hi sandehapadeṣu vastuṣu
pramāṇam antaḥkaraṇapravṛttayaḥ ||*

Śāk. I. 20.

All the above references to Kālidāsa are famous ones. So I have not further explained them. There are instances where other famous poets also are imitated. For want of time and space I have not quoted them. Kālidāsa himself stated in his Mālavikāgnimītra that Bhāsa is his predecessor. But yet it is ridiculous to try to argue that Kālidāsa himself might have imitated verses from Yajñaphala.

Let us now examine one by one, the four epithets used by Sri Kalidasa Sastri to prove that Yajñaphala is written by Bhāsa. The first one is bhāṣāyā atiprācīnasaṁskṛtarvāt. He did not give sufficient examples which are capable of proving this statement. Instance of non-observance of rules of Pāṇini may be shown in mahārājñch (p. 23, line 6) and mahārājānam (p. 23, line 9) in the place of mahārājasya and mahārājam respectively. But in the same play, the words mahārājasya and mahārājam the correct forms are used many a time. Kaikeyī addressed Dhśaratha as āryaputra (ajjautta p. 39, line 9). It may appear as a violation of rule of Bharata for, Daśaratha was not a youth (yuvā). But it is artificial. Similar expressions are not used in other plays ascribed to Bhāsa. However, to introduce wilfully, some constructions against the sūtras of grammar of Pāṇini and some technical terms against the rules of dramaturgy of Bharata is not difficult for a veteran poet.

The second statement is vastukalpanāyāḥ śreṣṭhatvāt. I see no śreṣṭhatva at all in his vastukalpanā. Let us examine some such instances of development of plot.

1. The celebration of birth day of Śrīrāma and other princes is described as if the very day of birth is celebrated and not that of sixteenth birth day as it should be according to the plot. The following expressions of Sumantra and Vidūṣaka in Act I justify this conjecture.

'samrāḍ eva sutodayena vihito muktiḥ pitiṇām ṛṇāt | patryād ṛṇād āsa bhavān nibaddho mokṣas tato 'bhūd bhavatas tu tasmāt ||
'kiṁ putrajanmanā tvam bubhukṣām api vismāritah'.

2. The three queens express their desire to meet their husband Daśaratha. On this occasion, Kausalyā says, "aham iyeṣṭhā; pūrvam sambhāvayitavyā". Sumitrā says, "aham dvayḥ k. mārayḥ janani; pūrvam sambhāvayitavyā" and Kaikeyī says, "aham eva pūrvam sambhāvayitavyā." These expressions of the three queens are not worthy of their position and the reverence we have for them. Even if we accept this, in the case of Kaikeyī for the sake of argument, it cannot be thought of as regards the other two queens. Daśaratha describes Kausalyā as jyeṣṭhāāvāpra-mānā, vismāṇyārhaṇā, katham api gurudeham cālayanī sagarvā (II. 16). Can anybody imagine that a great poet like Bhāsa would feel pleased to make Daśaratha describe Kausalyā in that manner? It is more ridiculing her than praising. So also to Śrīrāma's trials on archery have been rendered an object of ridicule wherein apratihataiva of śrīrāma-bāṇa is completely smashed.

3. The entire act II in Yajñaphala is unsuited to the story. In a play in which the plot ends with the marriage of Śrīrāma, there should not be any prominent reference to naming a successor to the throne, or, to any evil advice by Mantharā to Kaikeyī – which material could not.

be made use of in the development of the later story. Mantharā's words na bahu manyate mama devīm are totally irrelevant.

4. In the beginning of act V, Tāmyāyana ridicules his teacher and the very institution of Gurur-ulavāsa. This is unbecoming of Bhāsa. Any critic knowing the regard that Bhāsa had for the ancient Ṛṣis and the institutions they had established cannot tolerate this.

5. There are instances where the author of this play intended to declare Bharata to be an elder brother to Lakṣmaṇa. The order of the marriages in Act VII indicates that. But Bhāsa has clearly described in Pratimā that Lakṣmaṇa is elder to Bharata, though it is against Vālmiki. The author of Pratimā cannot try to contradict his own statement in Yajñaphala.

6. Even in manoeuvring the marriage of Śrīrāma with Sītā, it is not done in a dignified manner. It is only in the mediaeval ages that bride and bridegroom were made to meet and express their love to each other. Even in the Purāṇa age, such instances were very rare as in the case of Subhadrā and Arjuna or of Nala and Damayantī. But, as we believe that Śrīrāma and Sītā are the incarnations of Viṣṇu and Lakṣmī respectively, pre-arrangement to meet each other is unworthy of a poet of Bhāsa's stature. Even the meeting of Śrīrāma and Sītā in a garden is planned in a most indecent manner. The conversation among Muṣṭika, Sthūlamsa and Dīrghabāhu reveals that Janaka and Viśvāmitra wilfully arranged their meeting in a garden. When Muṣṭika asked 'kim mahārājo viśvāmitraś ca jānīta etat ?' Dīrghabāhu replies 'jānītaḥ. ata eva tayoṛ ekānte darśanam anumatam bhavet'. Can anybody appreciate this type of treatment in such a ceremonial scene? The situation created for Śrīrāma to meet Sītā is also an imitation to Duṣyanta's meeting with Sakuntalā. The conversation between Sītā and Madhurikā justifies this idea.

The third statement is rasabhāvālaṅkāranāṭyāṅgānām manoharatamatvāt. This play ends with the marriage of Śrīrāma with Sītā. So it is clear that the author intended to introduce śṛṅgāra-rasa. But it is not properly developed. Act VI, is the only act that helps the development of śṛṅgāra, but the plot and its treatment cannot be of Bhāsa's creation as already described. All the supposed good features are mere imitations of Kālidāsa and others. So there is no manoharatamatva of anything worth to name in the play.

The fourth statement is bāṇādivarṇitānekasāmānyabhāsanāṭakasaṃvāditvāt. This is not difficult for a poet even of average capacity to create such saṃvādas in a play when one intends to do so.

So I conclude that Bhāsa is not the author of the play Yajñaphala or in other words the author who wrote all the thirteen plays ascribed to Bhāsa has not written Yajñaphala.

OBJECT - PHILOSOPHICAL AND GRAMMATICAL - IN SANSKRIT TRADITION

I. Introductory

Philosophy and grammar are so closely intertwined with each other in Sanskrit tradition, that it often becomes problematic to dissociate them. Later Sanskrit immensely adopted Sanskrit philosophical terminology, so that sometimes contexts turn up in which there occurs a riddle as to the exact nature of the subject - philosophy or grammar.

II. 'Object' in Modern Philosophical Contexts

The term object in modern philosophical contexts is generally used for 'that in which the activity of the mind ends or towards which it is directed'¹. In Sanskrit philosophical spheres the trend is to use the object in the latter sense - the direction of the mind may be to any line of mental activity, but not to a satisfaction which may be equivalent to the end of that activity.

III. 'Object' in Sanskrit Philosophical Tradition

Sanskrit tradition reveals a vast range of gradation in the concept of 'object'. The most common term used in Sanskrit philosophical circles for 'object' is viṣaya; Gotama, in his Nyāya-sūtras in one context²; uses it in the sense of sensuous object, being used with reference to its fixed relationship with individual senses, while in another context³ he uses this term in relation to the totality of senses. The *Sāṃkhya-tattava-kaumudī*⁴ uses it in the sense of 'topical description', the 'objects being those which, by their diverse forms, make a subject presentable'. This means that the range of 'object' was not confined to the senses, but extended to any sphere entitled to description.

2. na viṣayavyavasthānāt, Nyāyasūtra of Gotama, 3.1.2, ed. Vidyabhushan, Allahabad, 1930.

IV. 'Object' in the sense of Philosophical Validity

In his introduction to the first aphorism⁶ of Gotama, Vātsyāyana uses Gotama's term prameya the sense of which is 'philosophical validity'. He defines this prameya, being the object of philosophy, as 'that which is the knowledge of an object as it is; it should include any object whatsoever, as a pot, a garment, etc.'

But there are two important points to be borne in mind in this connection; the object must be based on empirical knowledge: 'It is an experience of that which is', or 'an experience of that attribute which actually characterizes an object'.

V. The Object confined to the Phenomenal world

According to the Tattvacintāmaṇi, undefinable knowledge is beyond the scope of valid or non-valid knowledge.⁸ This undefinable knowledge forms no part of practical life, for which an instance like this will be valid: 'This is silver – with reference to actual silver'. The object, in the sense of philosophical validity, therefore, to use a Kantian phraseology is confined to the phenomenal world.

VI. The Range of Object

Gotama says, on the one hand that 'sense cannot transcend on object'¹⁰. On the other hand, he also recognizes the validity of recognition,¹¹ so that mental life represents cognition plus recognition of an object which cannot take place when the mind is drawn away by another object.¹²

VII. Cognition of the Object: No Extreme Duality

That the Nyāya School did not recognize an extreme duality in the cognition of the object may be inferred from Gotama's accountability of visual perception. He states that an object is perceived by the contact of a ray from the eye with the object, large or small.¹³ The Vedānta deviates from this physical approach and speaks of perception occurring where at least a partial identity of cognitive vr̥tti with the form of the perceived object takes place.¹⁴ In Sāṃkhya, B.K. Sengupta speaks of 'a primary sense object relation which remains to be clarified'.¹⁵

VIII. The wide range of Gadādhara's Theory of Objectivity

Gadādhara's theory of objectivity has a wide range. It has a scope, not only for the substance of an object, but also for its attributes. For the cognition of a pot in such a context as 'I know this pot', is not confined to the pot, but also extends to the attributes¹⁶ of the pot. In fact, the substantive, in some cases, may be a mere abstraction; the attributes, however, may present a solid entity to the observer – a matter of universal experience of totality.

Moreover, Gadādhara points out that cognition has always an objective reference.¹⁷ In this connection, although we may accept the ideal construction of an object, the 'givenness'¹⁸ of an object also is no less an important feature of it, as S.P. Bannerjee points out.

IX. Conclusion

It would appear from the above data that –

(1) Ancient Indian view of the 'object' had a wide range, from its sensuous to mentalistic aspects.

(2) Even realistic systems, like the Nyāya, had to boil down their view of duality as a basic for the concept of object.

(3) The validity of the concept of the object as being limited to the phenomenal world has to be appreciated, in view of the limitations of human knowledge.

X. 'Object' as a Grammatical Concept

'Object', as a grammatical concept, has presented difficulties to experts, both modern and ancient. Thus Jespersen, states that the most popular definition of the object is that the object denotes the person or thing on which the action of the verb is performed, but this definition could not apply to an occurrence like 'John burns his finger'¹⁹. Pāṇini, therefore, approached the concept of the grammatical object in a non-committal presentation. Thus while in I. iv. 49 he defines the object as that which is the one most desired by the agent, in the next sūtra I. iv. 50 he defines the object as that which is not liked by agent, as viṣaṃ bhuñkte, 'he eats poison', though Patañjali tries to find a common thread in these two sūtras by explaining that an undesirable object is also sometimes preferred to a more undesirable one if it happens to conflict against someone.²⁰

XI. Composite and Comprehensive Nature of the Grammatical Object

Commenting on Pāṇini II. iii. 1 anabhihite, Kaiyaṭa says that in the utterance 'he is preparing a mat', the concept of the object is not exhausted with the formal expression 'mat'.²¹ The object includes the whole process of preparing the mat.

The analytical nature of the grammatical object has been similarly exhaustively handled by Gadādhara from various points of view :-

(1) He emphasizes the fact that the scope of the verb is restricted to mere action, not the fruit; the fruit of the action being the scope of the accusative suffix.²²

(2) Gadādhara goes very deep into the logical aspects of the grammatical object, stating that in an utterance 'He smells a flower' (puṣpaṃ jighrati), considering the fact that nobody smells a flower, but only the odor, he has noticed four elements of this cognition.

(a) 'Predication' (prakāratā). The case-ending -am of puṣpam directs us to this predication (said about the object) which is strictly an attribute of case-ending.

(b) The sensuous element odour, technically named viśayatā, objectivity lying in the odour. It was said to be a necessary condition for predication.

(c) Something 'comprehended' (ādheyatā), being the abstract aspect of viśayatā.

(d) Inherence (samavāya), being an abstract relationship, which is directly related to ādheyatā.

It is this bundle of four relationships that has generated the concept of smelling a flower.²³

(3) Nāgeśa's analysis of the objective case-ending as a dynamic marker:

According to Nāgeśa, the objective case-ending has a capacity for implying the function of the object,²⁴ for every case-ending has a capacity for denoting the function of the case²⁵ concerned. For instance, in the utterance harim bhajati, 'he adores Hari', adoration is the function of the root itself, namely bhaj; but the relationship of this adoration to Hari is denoted by the case-ending -am in harim.²⁶

XII. Importance of the Object for the Concept of the Verb

Nāgeśa opposes the theory which excludes object from the verb. He states that if the object be dissociated from the verb, gacchati in the phrase grāmaṃ gacchati, 'he goes to the village', will give only the sense of separation²⁷, but the separation has some object to which it is directed.

XIII. Interrelation of Object and Action

Nāgeśa opposes the theory, attributed to Bhaṭṭoji Dīkṣita, that object and action have separate and independent functions. In his opinion object and action have inherent relation, being mutually attributive.²⁸ Cf. similar opinion by Gadādhara, according to whom action expressed by Caitraḥ pacati, 'Caitra is cooking' is pākaḥ, 'cooking' which functions as an attribute to the substantive as a subject, so that the verbal phrase could be attributively transformed as 'Caitra with an action consisting of cooking'.²⁹

XIV. General Conclusion

The grammatical object, as presented above by Grammarians and Gadādhara may sound somewhat hyperanalytical, being set up as a composite of so many elements, but although speech habits may make the perception of language quite easy, a little reflection cannot but impress one with the importance of the various delicate forces which have contributed to linguistic structure.

The general philosophical trend, both in philosophy proper and grammar, may thus reveal an urge for the ascertainment of inter-relations in the various aspects of these intellectual spheres.

KRṢṢA IN HINDI LITERATURE

Background :

The Bhakti cult, a movement in Medieval India, preaches the most passionate devotion of love. But it is correct in no way to say that the cult sprang, developed, flourished and reached its climax only within the Medieval Period. The germs of Bhakti are found in the religious thought of the Hindus from the very beginning. We find references of Lord Kṛṣṇa in Vedas, Brāhmaṇas, Upaniṣads, Sūtras, Bhāgavata, etc. As my subject is 'Kṛṣṇa in Hindi Literature', so it will be out of place to discuss Kṛṣṇa in Sanskrit Literature.

The Bhāgavatas in 500 B.C. made Viṣṇu as the ultimate reality and sang devotional hymns in His prayer to secure salvation. According to them, 'the destiny of the emancipation is to dwell in Vaikuṇṭha enjoying eternal bliss at the feet of Viṣṇu'. This cult was taken ahead by Āḷvārs (Vaiṣṇava saints) who flourished in the period of later Darśanas as a counter part to Aḍiyārs (Saiva saints)

For the first time Nāthamuni compiled the collection of their hymns in the Nālāyira-prabandam; probably it was edited by Nammāḷvār. Tirumaṅgai wrote the largest number of hymns and Nammāḷvār was the foremost among the saints. The Āḷvārs were ardent worshippers of Viṣṇu and their relation with God was like that of a wife to her husband.

Having such a background behind, the medieval period presented itself as a great champion of the Vaishnavism. This Vaishnavism which was dipping in Vedic age and streaming under Āḷvārs became a mighty flood and spread all over Medieval India.

Vaishnavism flourished in the South before it made its advent into Northern India in the fourteenth century. The Krishnaite cult found its leader in Śrī Vallabhācārya (1479–1531 A.D.) a Telugu brahmin, born and educated in the holy city of Benares. He named his philosophy 'Śuddhādvaita' and while recognising knowledge as a possible means of salvation stressed the supreme importance of Bhakti for the majority of seekers. Bhakti, he holds is both a means and an end and is acquired by Divine Grace or Puṣṭi. Kṛṣṇa who is Brahman, reality, intelligence and joy, alone exists. Released souls rise to Kṛṣṇa's heaven. His heaven called Vyāpi-Vaikuṇṭha and in it are a heavenly Bṛndāvan and glorious forests. From Kṛṣṇa's side springs Rādhā and from the pores of the skin of Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā come millions of Gopas and Gopīs and also cattles and all the denizens of the woods. Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā sport eternally in the celestial Bṛndāvan with their devotees. The loftiest aspiration of Vallabha is to become a Gopī and sport with Kṛṣṇa in his heaven. The cult is called śevā, service of Kṛṣṇa. The idea of joy has great importance in this cult of Kṛṣṇa-bhakti and Kṛṣṇa is worshipped not as an ideal of virtue but as an image of joy.

Braja was the centre of the Krishnaite cult, where Vallabhācārya and his son Vaikuṇṭhanātha settled down and almost the entire body of poetry celebrating the beauty and erotic exploits of Kṛṣṇa is in Braja-bhāṣā. This poetry of Kṛṣṇa-bhaktas is extremely rich in its descriptions of the fascinations of child-hood. All that was rich, beautiful, tender or sweet was welcomed and utilised as an aid to the worship of Kṛṣṇa, for the Lord himself was not an ascetic but the embodiment of the highest beauty and keenest joy. Viṭhalanātha, the son of Vallabhācārya was the founder of Aṣṭachāp, a group of eight contemporary poets all of outstanding merit and devotees of Kṛṣṇa. The poets of Aṣṭachāp were Sūr Dās, Kumbhan Dās, Parmānand Dās, Kṛṣṇa Dās, Chit Svāmi, Govind Svāmi, Caturbhuj Dās and Nand Dās.

Sūr Dās was the most outstanding poet. He was the literary leader of Aṣṭachāp. His name is a by-word all over North India. Sūr Dās' poetry is limited in its scope, since it does not comprehend life in all its variety. Its pre-occupation is with the child-hood and youthful love of Kṛṣṇa. Sūr Dās depicts Kṛṣṇa in his verses first as a lovely child full of delightful pranks and next as an adolescent lover who wins the affections of women and sends them almost mad with his personal charms. He shines with matchless lustre in that little world of romance into which we are invited to escape from the tyranny of reason and reality. In its own sphere Sūr Dās' poetry is full of endless variety. It is really surprising how the blind poet could be aware of the innumerable pleasant tricks and attitudes of little children that are a source of joy to their elders. Kṛṣṇa's infancy and childhood are described with great minuteness and every opportunity has been utilized for bringing out the sweetness of early years. Similarly the behaviour of Kṛṣṇa and the Gopikās while they lived together in a state of mutual love comes in for detailed treatment. Their love chase, the Rāsa, on the bank of Jamuna in the moonlit nights, and particularly the infatuation that Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa felt for each other are described in fascinating verses of cloying sweetness. But Sūr Dās is at his best when he depicts the pangs of separation. When Kṛṣṇa migrates to Mathura and settles down there in happy enjoyment of the affections of his hump-backed mistress, the Gopikās are almost mad with grief. Kṛṣṇa sends his friend Uddhava who has certain pretensions to philosophy to console them. But no sooner does he begin his homily on the importance of nir-guṇa as against the sa-guṇa than the Gopikās, overwhelm him with queries, taunts and pleasentries. The Bhramargīt which embodies this episode of the discomfiture of the rationalist in the person of Uddhava by the triumphant Gopikās who speak in the language of Bhakti, based on emotional attachment, is glorious poetry. It is remarkable equally for its understanding of human love and for the musical sweetness of its verse. We see here śṛṅgāra-rasa, at its highest and best. His genius was essentially lyrical and it is the composition of short melodious poems, expressing sincere feelings that he really excels. His poetry does not command much universality of appeal but within its own limit it is exquisite, remarkable both for its matter and manner and the blind poet of Agra holds a very prominent place in the galaxy of Hindi poets.

Nand Dās:

Among the poets of Aṣṭachāp next to Sūr Dās in literary merit was Nand Dās. He was a younger contemporary of Sūr Dās. His Rāsa-pañcādhyaī and Bhramargīt are the famous works. The former is an excellent description of the Rāsa of which Kṛṣṇa and the Gopikās were so fond, and the latter is a rendering of the theme which Sūr Dās treats of in his Bhramargīt. Nand Dās' poetry is full of rich verbal music. No other poet of Aṣṭachāp can claim poetic eminence comparable to that of Sūr Dās or even of Nand Dās. But they all wrote verses on the theme of Kṛṣṇa's childhood and his love sports with the Gopikās much in the same way as Sūr Dās and Nand Dās.

Hit-harivansh and Gadādhara Paṇḍit:

Hit-harivansh was the founder of a new sect known as Rādhāvallābh-sampradāy which laid greater stress on the worship of Rādhā than that of Kṛṣṇa. His poetry though small in volume is fine in quality. His genious was highly inventive and he presents in his poetry numerous settings and situations in which the personal charm of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa and the sweetness of love are excellently brought out. Another great poet was Gadādhara Paṇḍita, a brahmin of Āndhra who became a devotee of Kṛṣṇa and lived at Brindavan. His verses are of a fairly high order.

Mirābāi :

Mirābāi, the saint poetess is peerless among the poetesses of Hindi and also the best known of them. Her poetic fame depends primarily upon her padas which are extremely popular all over North India. They are remarkable for their sincere spiritual yearning and a complete abandon to a mood of loving worship. Mirābāi is a devotee of Kṛṣṇa and to that extent she may be classed with Sūr Dās and other poets of Aṣṭachāp. But she has a mystic quality which marks her out from them. She thinks Kṛṣṇa as her lover and Lord to whom all her affections are offered without any reserve. She longs to be one with the Lord and some times feels that union has been achieved. Thus she expressed now the pangs of separation and again the joys of union.

Raskhan :

Though a muslim, he was a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He is the author of Premvāṇika and Sujan Raskhan. His poetry has a great popular appeal and a number of his verses are widely remembered and recited. This is due to the sweet and easy flow of his lines and also to the theme of love for Kṛṣṇa which finds a simple and fascinating treatment at his hands.

Riti Age :

Towards the middle of the seventeenth century a distinct change occurred. Poetry changed its complexion and purpose and became secular and sensuous. Poets inclined towards poetics also. It rapidly lost touch with the common man and instead of trying to tackle fundamental questions and living problems, it devoted itself to the less laudable task of catering for the sensuous pleasures of the rich. The poets indulge in elaborate descriptions of the female form, choosing as their subjects scenes of union between lovers and their sweet hearts or the pangs of separation. Though it cannot be called a devotional poetry, the poets have generally depicted lovers and beloveds in the form of Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā. So Kṛṣṇa is always in the themes of the poets through out this age.

Modern age :

In the modern age also the theme of Kṛṣṇa has not been left by the poets. Bharatendu Harishchand depicted Kṛṣṇa in his works as incarnation of God. Ayodhyasing Upadhyay in his great epic, Priya-pravās depicted Kṛṣṇa as a great man, who served the humanity. This is due to scientific influence which is based on reasons. Dr. Mythili Sharan Gupta¹ has also taken Kṛṣṇa as incarnation in his Dvāpar and Jayadrath Badh. Satyanarayan Kaviratna and Babu Jagannath Dass Ratnakar also took up the old theme of Kṛṣṇa and Gopikās in their Bhramargit and Uddhavaśatak respectively but in different styles.

Though last but not least in importance is the great epic named Kṛṣṇāyaṇa composed by Dr. D P. Misra.² The epic is a great gain to the poetry of present era. The colourful character and amiable nature of Śrī Kṛṣṇa has been well depicted, in Kṛṣṇāyaṇa. The spiritual doctrines and gospels of Lord Kṛṣṇa have received poet's utmost attention. The love of Rādhā, affection of Gopīs for Kṛṣṇa and Yaśodā's yearning for the uplift and welfare of her loving son are some important points of Misra's epic. Plainly speaking this mainly deals with the life and philosophy of Lord Kṛṣṇa. Dr. Misra has put forth all his views regarding the life, activities and doctrines of Lord Kṛṣṇa through the medium of poetic utterances. He has succeeded beautifully in giving an ideal form to the things related to the life and deeds of Kṛṣṇa. For him Kṛṣṇa is not merely a lover of Gopīs or Rādhā, he is the bearer of the symbol of lasting human happiness, peace and tranquility on the whole. It represents the best traditions of Indian culture and civilization. Through this excellent epic Dr. Misra has laid particular emphasis on the development of the spirit of Indian culture. The views, thoughts and ideas expressed in the Kṛṣṇāyaṇa are no doubt clear, convincing and comprehensive. The originality of the Poet's mind is reflected in them.

Thus we see in all the periods of Hindi Literature Kṛṣṇa has been depicted by the great poets in their great works.

1. Dr. Mythili Sharan Gupta is an M.P. and a Poet laureate.

2. Dr. Misra is the present Vice-Chancellor of Saugar University, Saugar.

The most remarkable thing about the Kṛṣṇāyaṇa is the fact that it was written inside the prison, when Dr. Misra was detained by British authorities.

PRAKṚTI AND PURUṢA IN SĀMKNHYAKĀRIKĀ

Īśvarakṛṣṇa's Sāṃkhyakārikā (SK) is stated to be the oldest and the most authoritative work of the Sāṃkhya system. But it is very difficult to understand it. An attempt has been made here to understand and explain the concepts of Puruṣa and Prakṛti, following the kārikās.

The fundamental principle of the system is variously called Pradhāna, Prakṛti and Avyakta. It is necessary to understand the exact meaning and implication of all these terms. Pradhāna means 'principal'. It is the root cause, the uncaused cause of the whole world with all its wide variety. Not only so, but according to SK. 62 even the saṃsāra is of that principle. Thus the term Pradhāna is quite significant. There is one important point which should be noted in this connection. Ordinarily in other systems īśvara or Brahman is the supreme principle. In the Sāṃkhya, on the other hand, īśvara has no place, and it is the non-sentient which is Pradhāna. Even Puruṣa is not important. SK 60 even suggests that guṇavatī and upakāriṇī Prakṛti is superior to aguṇa and anupakāri Puruṣa.

In SK. 3 the term prakṛti is used in the sense of 'cause'; even the seven elements mahat, ahaṅkāra and five tanmātras are called Prakṛti, inasmuch as they are the causes of their respective effects. In other kārikās the word stands for the fundamental principle. In the Sāṃkhya, as in other systems, the term is used to denote the material, or the inherent cause.¹ While commenting on SK.9 Davies brings in the question of an efficient cause also², but it should be noted that the Sāṃkhya never refers to an efficient cause at all. An efficient cause must be sentient,

1. Cf. prakṛteś ca pratijñādṛṣṭānt ānuparodhāt, Brahmasūtra, I. iv. 23.

2. John Davies: The Sāṃkhyakārikā of Īśvara Krishna, p. 17 ff.

which is not the case with Prakṛti. Puruṣa is not a doer and cannot, therefore, be an efficient cause. Though it may appear rather strange, it has to be admitted that the Sāṃkhya has explained the creation of the world without accepting any agent.

The term avyakta is not as easy to understand as the other two. In the very second verse the author says that the discriminative knowledge of vyakta, avyakta and jñā is a better remedy for averting the three-fold miseries, as compared with the ordinary and Vedic remedies. Here 'avyakta' stands for Prakṛti, 'vyakta' for its effects and 'jñā' for Puruṣa. The term vyakta is used for all the effects of Prakṛti. Vyakta cannot be taken to mean perceptible by sense-organs, because mahat, ahankāra and manas are not so perceptible. Sovani thinks that while efforts are made to prove the existence of Avyakta and Puruṣa by inference, no attempt is made to prove the existence of vyakta; hence the contention of the Kārikākāra is that everything except Pradhāna and Puruṣa is an object of pratyakṣa.³ This is not correct. That the author has not tried to prove mahat, etc., by inference does not mean that they are objects of pratyakṣa. Perhaps 'vyakta' means that which is manifest in any form whatsoever. Thus buddhi which is defined as 'adhyavasāya', has eight forms and it is manifested through them. Similarly ahankāra is explained as abhimāna and it is experienced as such. Prakṛti is not an object of ordinary experience. In SK. 8 the author says that it is anupalabdha because it is sūkṣma. Can we say that the word anupalabdha is some sort of an explanation of avyakta? In SK. 7 the author has given eight reasons why an existent object does not become comprehensible. One of these causes is saukṣmya or subtlety. As explained by the commentators, saukṣmya means having a very small measure. When Prakṛti is stated in SK. 8 to be anupalabdha on account of saukṣmya, it cannot mean small. It must mean something which is above spatial limitations, as suggested by C.K. Raja.⁴ If this is accepted, it will be easy to explain the term avyakta to mean that which is not only suprasensuous but which is beyond all limitations.

In SK. 9 the author has given five arguments to prove sat kāryam. According to the commentators these arguments prove the existence of an effect in the cause prior to its production. Davies has explained the verse differently.⁵ According to his explanation 'sat' is kārya. By 'sat' he understands that which has formal existence and by

'asat', the unformed Prakṛti. Looking to the context, the explanation of Davies appears to be better but it is difficult to accept his meaning to sat and asat. Further Davies also brings in some reference to the efficient cause, which is not admitted by the Sāṃkhya. The difficulty in the traditional explanation is that we have to add 'utpatteḥ prāk' before 'kāryam sat'. The context does not warrant any such addition. I would like to explain the verse in this way. In SK. 7 we are informed of the causes by which existing things do not become objects of apprehension. In SK. 8 it is said that Prakṛti cannot be apprehended because of saukṣmya, but it can be apprehended through its effects, mahat and the rest. It is now necessary to show that the effects exist and SK. 9 gives arguments for the same. All the arguments in SK. 9 can be so explained. It is not necessary, therefore, to add 'prior to production', as is done by the commentators. Thus there is no abhāva of the kārya and consequently nor of Prakṛti.

Five arguments given in SK. 15 are connected with the first quarter of SK. 16, which runs: kāraṇam asty avyaktam. This is generally understood to mean that Avyakta is the cause (avyaktaṃ kāraṇam asti). Why should we change the order of words like this? I think that it is better to construe - kāraṇam avyaktaṃ asti meaning 'the cause is Avyakta.' All the five arguments in SK. 15 can as well establish that the cause is avyakta as that Avyakta is the cause. The last argument 'avibhāgād vaiśvarūpyasya' would actually point to our understanding of Avyakta as beyond all distinctions and limitations.

SK. 16 further states that Avyakta operates through the three guṇas by blending and modification. The word guṇa has many meanings. It means 'attribute' 'subordinate' and 'cord'. I think that all these senses are intended here. When we say that the objects of the world are full of pleasure, pain and delusion, we have in our mind the first meaning. The second is intended when Prakṛti is called Pradhāna whereas these three are guṇas. They are the three constituents of Prakṛti and their relation with it is that of aṅga and aṅgin. Lastly guṇas are intertwined with one another so as to make one complete whole. The best illustration of this would, of course, be the three knots of hair tied into one by intertwining them. That is how women generally dress their hair.

Sattva is light and illuminating, rajas is active and exciting, and tamas is heavy and enveloping. Thus the real contrast is between sattva and tamas, while rajas helps them both in their respective functions. This is clearly brought out by SK. 23 and 25. In SK. 23 the author has given four sāttvika and four tāmasa forms of buddhi, but he has not mentioned any rājasa form. In SK. 25 the author gives three divisions of ahankāra, namely sāttvika, rājasa and tāmasa; but the modifications are only of the first and the last, while the second works like an auxiliary force. By accepting rajas as an inherent attribute or constituent of Prakṛti, the Sāṃkhya has scored one important point, inasmuch as it has tried, however clumsily, to explain the activity of the non-sentient fundamental. The Sāṃkhya believes that sentiency and activity can be separated and need not go hand in hand.

From Prakṛti we now turn to Puruṣa. By accepting rajas the Sāṃkhya has separated consciousness and activity, but it has not gone so far as to say that consciousness also arises out of the non-sentient. Puruṣa which is neither a cause nor an effect is accepted. SK. 17 gives five arguments for the existence of Puruṣa. Out of these five, three arguments, namely saṅghātaparārthatva, bhokṛbhāva and pravṛtteḥ kaivalyārtha are related with each other. Objects of the world are for the use of others. Thus they are objects of experience, while Puruṣa is the experiencer or bhoktā. These two arguments are connected with the design of the world and this design is preceded by the activity of designing. Thus racanā and pravṛtti both are parārtha. It is worthy of note that the author of the Brahmasūtras, while criticising the Sāṃkhya refers first to racanā and then to pravṛtti.⁶ The remaining arguments are on a different footing. Prakṛti is endowed with three guṇas and as described in SK. 11, it is objective, common, etc. These are also the characteristics of the modifications of Avyakta. That kārikā further states that Puruṣa is like as well as unlike Avyakta. This dissimilarity of the spirit is due to the absence of guṇas and consequent characteristics. SK. 17 states that Puruṣa exists because of the absence of three guṇas and other characteristics. It may be asked as to how can the said iriguṇādiviparīyaya be adduced as an argument to prove the existence of Puruṣa. If we do not believe that Puruṣa is devoid of guṇas, it will be eternally connected with them and will never be liberated from the pangs of saṃsāra. The Puruṣa must, therefore, be above the guṇas. The argument of adhiṣṭhāna means that the activity of the non-sentient requires a superintending agent, which must be sentient. We shall refer to this point a little later.

SK. 18 gives three arguments to establish the plurality of Puruṣas, namely definite adjustment of birth, death and organs, non-simultaneity of activity and absence of three guṇas. The first two arguments are very similar but the third is different. Traditional commentators explain it as the diversity due to the preponderance of one of the attributes. I think that it is better to understand 'traiguṇyaviparyaya' here in the same sense as triguṇādiviparyaya in SK. 17. The modifications of Prakṛti arise out of activity, which again is dependent upon the interaction of guṇas. Thus, because Prakṛti is endowed with guṇas, it can be many. Puruṣa is without these guṇas and so cannot multiply itself. That is why it is accepted that Puruṣas are many.

In SK. 19 the author describes the characteristics of Puruṣa as isolated, inactive, etc. The kārikā begins with 'tasmāc ca viparyāsa'. Ancient and modern scholars explain this viparyāsa with reference to SK. 11. Looking to the context, however, I believe that 'viparyāsa' is to be understood here as 'traiguṇyaviparyaya'. The characteristics of Puruṣa as isolated, neutral, etc., are to be understood as following from the absence of guṇas. Thus the author actually proves everything – existence, plurality and characteristics of Puruṣa by taking recourse to the absence of guṇas. On the whole the difference between Prakṛti and Puruṣa can be reduced to two points only: firstly, Puruṣa is sentient while Prakṛti is non-sentient; secondly, Prakṛti is endowed with guṇas whereas Puruṣa is without them.

Puruṣa and Prakṛti are so opposed to each other that any contact between them is not easy to understand. How is it then that the world becomes what it appears? SK. 20 is a reply to this. It is unfortunate that the commentators have not given due importance to this verse. The quality of satva is illuminating and it reflects the sentiency of Puruṣa. It is because of this reflected sentiency that the non-sentient modifications of Prakṛti appear to be sentient. Similarly the reflected sentience is active and on the strength of this, the original sentient Puruṣa seems to be active even though it is not. Thus there is only appearance and not reality. Here we find that the Sāṃkhya has to accept adhyāsa in some form or another, even though the system is generally accepted to be realistic. Perhaps it is impossible to explain creation without admitting adhyāsa, when the fundamentals – Prakṛti and Puruṣa are so wide apart with a 'touch-me-not' tendency. That the Sāṃkhya accepts adhyāsa totally can be seen from SK. 62, where the author asserts that it is Prakṛti, which is bound, which migrates and which is liberated. Puruṣa is neither bound, nor liberated, nor does it migrate. It will be interesting to compare SK. 62 with the Māṇḍūkyaopaniṣatkārikā, II. 32 of Gauḍapāda.⁷ The Sāṃkhya does not clearly state that the world is false

7. na nirodho na cotpattir na baddho na ca sādhaḥaḥ na mumukṣur na vai nukta ity eṣā paramārthatā

but we have to admit that if we go just one step forward from the Sāṃkhya position, we shall come to the Advaita.

Īśvarakṛṣṇa has given various illustrations to explain the relationship between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. SK. 21 illustrates the relation by the lame-blind-association. SK. 57, 58 illustrate the purpose of the activity of Prakṛti. SK. 59 gives the example of a dancer, and SK. 60 of a maid-servant. Some understand SK. 61 as giving the illustration of a lady belonging to a noble family. It should be noted that none of these illustrations can hold water, if we examine it a little carefully. In most of the cases the illustrations are of sentient persons, while the illustrated Prakṛti is non-sentient. The illustration of a noble lady even lacks propriety, because while a noble lady does not show herself to any one but her husband, Prakṛti shows herself to other Puruṣas, barring the one that has seen her. In the lame-blind-association, a lame man directs a blind man, whereas here Puruṣa does nothing. The only example which comes near to the point at issue is that of milk which nourishes a calf. The problem is however, slightly different. It is said that Prakṛti brings about enjoyment and liberation of Puruṣa. As we have noted above, SK. 20 shows that what appears is not real in toto. SK. 62 says that bondage and liberation are of Prakṛti, while SK. 63 informs us that Prakṛti binds itself by means of its seven forms and isolates by one. Thus bondage and liberation are of Prakṛti and not Puruṣa. Where is the scope for puruṣārtha then? What is the use of giving the example of milk which nourishes a calf and not itself?

Several questions may be asked about Puruṣa. Are the characteristics of Puruṣa given in SK. 19 compatible with the arguments in SK. 17, 18? If the Puruṣa is totally neutral and inactive, can it be an enjoyer? Can it, further, be said that all the composite objects are for Puruṣa? How can it be said that the activity is for isolation, when isolation is already there before the activity began? How, again, can Puruṣa be a superintending agent, when he has no activity? SK. 18 is still more difficult to understand. Puruṣas are said to be many on the grounds of the definiteness of birth, death and organs and non-simultaneity of activity. But Puruṣa has no birth, no death, no organs and no activity. It may be suggested that just as in the Kevalādvaita there are two realms of experience, exoteric and esoteric, even so here also we can admit two Puruṣas – Jñā-puruṣa, which is just sentient and isolated and a Liṅga-puruṣa who has confused himself with the modifications of Prakṛti. This suggestion may simplify the problem but the text of the kārikās does not warrant it. Again, even if we differentiate between Jñā-puruṣa and Liṅga-puruṣa, it is not easy to explain how Jñā and Prakṛti come in contact with each other. This is one of the fundamental problems of philosophy and no system has been able to answer it in a fully satisfactory manner. The Sāṃkhya accepts that Puruṣa is confounded with the effects of Prakṛti and it is to be released. How it has happened is some thing that defies explanation.

SK. 23 gives eight forms of buddhi, namely dharma, jñāna, vai-rāgya, aśvarya and their opposites. SK. 63 states that Prakṛti binds itself by means of seven forms and liberates by one, i.e. knowledge. Thus knowledge causes release while the other seven give bondage. According to SK. 65, Puruṣa like a witness sees Prakṛti, which has turned back from the seven forms of evolution and which has, therefore, ceased to be productive. After the seven forms are diverted of casual energy, the body remains like a potter's wheel, revolving through the previous impulse. When that impulse dies down, the body falls and Pradhāna retires. Puruṣa is thus absolutely and eternally isolated.

This explanation of mokṣa raises one very important question. Knowledge is one of the eight forms of buddhi and as the author says in SK. 37, buddhi discriminates Puruṣa from Prakṛti. Puruṣa, therefore, can have knowledge only through buddhi. How can Puruṣa be isolated from Prakṛti, unless it is isolated from buddhi, which is a modification of the latter? If Puruṣa is isolated from buddhi also, how can it have knowledge which is a form of buddhi? If Pradhāna retires, buddhi also retires, and so does knowledge. Does it mean that Puruṣa is simply sentient but has no knowledge? How can it be called Jñā then? As we have seen above, the text of the kārikās does not suggest any distinction between exoteric and esoteric levels of knowledge.

HARIHARA AND HIS CONTRIBUTION TO KANNAḌA LITERATURE

1. Harihara comes after the great renaissance of the twelfth century Liṅgāyat movement which took place in Karṇāṭak. A great many changes took place in the political life of Karṇāṭak in the twelfth century. The twelfth century is called the period of renaissance in Karṇāṭak, especially in the field of Kannaḍa literature, as a number of writers belonging to the ordinary strata of society, were raised to the status of high thinkers on problems of social life, language, literature, religion and above all on the problems of their daily life. Among these free thinkers there were men and many women writers such as Mahādeviyakka, Mukṭāyakka and others. There were many belonging to different castes and creeds and later became converted to Lingayatism. These men were trained to think freely in an institution known as Anubhavamantapa founded by Śrī Basaveśvara of Kalyāṇa where discussions on topics of religion, philosophy, etc., took place. People of all communities, castes, occupations and grades participated in such debates. Admissions were free for all these people. Such an institution is unique in the religious history of the world. Basaveśvara's aim was to achieve high ideals in morals, manners, education and religion. His was a magnetic personality which attracted men and women from all corners of India. His way of teaching, his way of holding conferences on schemes of sarvodaya, his attitude towards the removal of untouchability and his concept of the dignity of labour, which were later thought of by Ruskin and Gandhiji, are noteworthy. The Vacana literature which is the outcome of discussions in Anubhavamantapa or academy of discussion is unique in the world's and Kannaḍa literature. The flashes and sparklings of these thinkers have come down to us in the form of this Vacana literature, which inspired many Kannaḍa and Telugu poets to think on these lines and spread all these ideals in the south. Among these were great poets like Pāḷkurki Somanātha in Telugu country and Hairhara in Kannaḍa country who took the lead in establishing these ideals among the men of the south.

2. These ideas and ideals were held in high regard by such free thinkers and the poets of the first quarter of the thirteenth century both in Āndhra and Karṇāṭak. After the great bulk of Vacana literature, (it is traditionally known that about 160 crores of Vacanas were written by the authors in Kannaḍa) these poets began to interpret the greatness of those teachings on democratic lines and began to spread them vigorously among the people. In order to achieve this goal they adopted the old Dēśi (native) schools of literature, and composed works on these historical men, in Dēśi meters like dvipada, ragaḷe (ragaḍa in Telugu) and ṣaṭpadi in Kannaḍa, that is how a school of Purāṇa writings was started by Pāḷkurki Somanātha in Āndhra who wrote Srī Basava-purāṇamu in Telugu. He also composed many works in Telugu and Kannaḍa. He was a profound scholar in Telugu, Marathi, Kannaḍa and Sanskrit. Harihara who is an elder contemporary of Somanātha belonged to this school of writing. Many of the works of Somanātha were translated into Kannaḍa, especially his Basavapurāṇamu the earliest work on Basaveśvara in Telugu which was translated in the fourteenth century into Kannaḍa by the poet Bhīmakavi with his own adaptations. We should be glad to know that the literature which was written early by the court pandits, being principally for the pleasure of kings, and having a great deal of Sanskrit mixture in their languages, both Telugu and Kannaḍa, fell behind and the literatures for the advancement of the common man came out. Śaiva movement started once again and was vitalised by these poets and new literatures began to appear. These poets began to write Śiva-purāṇas and twentyfive lilās of Śiva in the native languages along with the works on the mystic poets and writers of the twelfth century.

As one would naturally expect, inter-relation of south Indian languages, literatures, religion and philosophers, especially of Tamil and Telugu was long forgotten, was revived and developed through their teachings and their works.

3. Harihara who undertook the scheme of composing works on all Śaiva saints irrespective of the parts of India they belonged to, started a new era in Kannaḍa language and literature by rejecting old ideologies, traditional views, forms of literatures and the language of delineation. He is aptly compared to Chaucer for narrating tales in a lucid and attractive manner. The language, i.e. Kannaḍa got a new status in the hands of this master poet. He composed many works in Kannaḍa - the most important of them are on the sixty-three Śaiva saints of Tamil Nad whose teachings had very much inspired Harihara. Those stories travelled from Tamil country to Karṇāṭak through him. In this country, works on these sixty-three men began to appear in different forms appraising their morals, manners and above all their deep devotion to Lord Śiva. These sixty-three saints are highly honoured by Liṅgāyats and works in different centuries upto this day have come to us in abundance. It is interesting to note that this number sixty-three has a peculiar significance; it represents the attainment of fulness (aikyattva) among the Śaivas, Liṅgāyats and Jains, etc. In addition to dissertation on all these sixty-three Purātans of Tamil country, Harihara also wrote works on the great poets like Kālidāsa, Bāṇa, Halāyudha, Udbhaṭa and Maluhāṇa belonging to different parts of India. He composed works on Śrī Basaveśvara, Mahādeviyakka¹ and on many others also. He composed Girijākalyāṇa a Campū-mahāprabandha, the story of Pārvatī's rigorous performance of penance to win Śiva and their ultimate marriage. Though seemingly the story has many resemblances to the story of Kumārasambhava of Kālidāsa, it has its own distinct individuality. To Kālidāsa the birth of Kumāra and the description of the torture of Tāraka were important but to Harihara the kalyāṇa or the marriage of Pārvatī is important. It is said that the poet Harihara composed more than one hundred and twenty poems and the authorship of not less than hundred and six has already been established, and of the rest, opinion is sharply divided among the scholars,

4. Harihara's creation has been an ocean of literature and like the works of Vālmiki, Vyāsa and Guṇāḍhya a source of inspiration for the subsequent poets. A number of poets have paid glowing tributes and homages to this great man, who broke the shackles of tradition in the field of Kannaḍa poetry. Many themes of Harihara have been developed by various subsequent poets in different meters in Kannaḍa. The events and persons in Harihara's literature have stimulated the later writers as illustrations of faith in the worth of man's achievements, nobility and dignity in making the earth a heaven. Since Telugu and Kannaḍa Dēśi types of poetry are becoming increasingly popular, these literatures which were primarily aimed at singing will attract the southerners now-a-days. Many poems of Harihara are really gems in the great ocean of

1. Mahādeviyakka is rightly compared by scholars to Avvaiyār of Tamil land. She composed Vacanas in Kannaḍa; she was a poetess of a very high order, who said that Lord Cannamallikārjuna alone is her husband and none else. Many work are written on this woman.

his literature and will definitely attract the attention of the world if the true spirit of the poet is brought to light. With this view in mind, I am here giving for the understanding of the scholars the theme and object of one of his highly beautiful, romantic and devotional works, namely Maluhāṇadevacarite written in ragale meter (ragaḍa of Telugu). Harihara brought to the notice of the Kannaḍigas the importance, the greatness of all Śaivas and the great work Periyapurāṇam – a mine of information to Harihara on sixty-three Śaiva saints, written by Śaikkilar, in Tamil during the eleventh (?) century. (He brought in spirit the world of Tamils, Kasmirians and others close to Karṇāṭak.)

II

5. As it has been already pointed out, Maluhāṇa is a Śaiva devotee and a poet who composed many stanzas in Sanskrit in praise of Lord Śiva. It is dubious whether any works have been composed on these Sanskrit poets except Harihara's. Harihara, leaving aside Maluhāṇa's poetic talent, narrated only the romantic and the devotional story. ('Kālhaṇa', 'Bilhaṇa' are Kasmirian names like 'Maluhāṇa' – the present Maluhāṇa in Kannaḍa). Maluhāṇa at the instruction of a courtesan became a great devotee of Śiva, with which story the poet Harihara is mainly concerned. The poet as opposed to the old sanyāsa theory, puts forth the idea that man will also obtain salvation if he transforms his thoughts, deeds and actions in Śivayoga. Here we envisage a new doctrine put forth by the poet. Another work of Harihara is on Nambiyāṇa, who is also one of such persons, the story of whom is already very popular in Tamil literature. Nambiyāṇa, also known as Saundara Perumāle is one of the sixty-three Śaiva saints of Tamil country. The poet Harihara selects Maluhāṇa for the hero of his poem Maluhāṇadevacarite since there are many resemblances to Vīra Saivism and Kasmir Saivism. The relationship between Kasmir Saivism on the one hand and Vīra Saivism of South India on the other developed in those days. It is very significant that such men as Maluhāṇa who were confined only to their native land and language were brought to the light even to the southern most part of India seven hundred and fifty years ago. Harihara, recognising these men of the deepest devotion to Śiva, began to sing of their glory in the temple of Virūpākṣa in Hampi (Vijayanagar) to enrich the faith of the public.

6. Maluhāṇa (Malhaṇa in Sanskrit) was born in Kasmir's capital Bhāratī-pīṭha, the abode of Śārādā, the Goddess of knowledge, to one Suvarṇa Bhaṭṭa, who was equal in riches and honour to Kubera, the God of Wealth and also to the king of that country whose close friend he was. Maluhaṇa was the only son of his father, who gave him the best type of education, performed the 'sacred thread ceremony' (upanayana) and also marriage in his early teens. Maluhaṇa's father in his old age, thinking that his only son should lead the happiest life even after his death, provided him with many comforts and set apart three crores and sixty lakhs of gold pieces so that his son might spend a thousand pieces of gold per day, calculating that he would live a hundred years, the normal age of man. And one day Suvarṇa Bhaṭṭa died of typhoid and, Maluhaṇa after observing all the necessary rites became the head of the family in its usual course. At that time he was a young lad of sixteen years, and the poet's description of the youth of this Maluhaṇa (though traditional poets never describe men like women in their *Kāvya*s, as it was not admitted by the Pandits and rhetoricians) is a masterly and a most original one.

7. In the same city was born Maluhaṇī to a courtesan Padmāvati the best dancer in the temple of Vijayeśvara in the city. She attained youth and the poet says that her beauty in youth is indescribable in words. There was none to be compared with her beauty. These descriptions of Maluhaṇa's and Maluhaṇī's youth, are highly pleasing and appealing for the Poet's fine poetical texture, the choice of apt and significant words and similies, phrases and lines. Poetry cannot rise to nobler and more beautiful descriptions than these vivid, expressive and suggestive lines. Her delicate parts of her body developed and every inclination is towards śṛṅgāra. She desired every ornament to her body which was naturally fair enough. This description of Maluhaṇī by Harihara reminds us of the beautiful description of Kālidāsa's Pārvatī in the Kumārasambhava. Maluhaṇī attained youth, exciting beauty, and also acquired proficiency in dancing and music.

8. On an auspicious occasion in the spring season, with all the decorations, and friends, viṣas and vidūṣakas, poets, musicians and with auspicious notes of bugles, drums and other *vādya*s, Maluhaṇa went to the temple of Vijayeśvara in a procession, for the worship of Vijayeśvara, and after worship was over sat as if in meditation upon the Lord Vijayeśvara. On the same day, Padmāvati, having beautifully decorated her daughter Maluhaṇī, took her in a triumphal procession with a host of her friends and servants to the same temple for the first devotional dance to be offered to Lord Vijayeśvara. She, while dancing, amidst so many rich and princes was seen by Maluhaṇa who, returning after his worship of God and meditations, saw and immediately fell in love with Maluhaṇī, who in turn also fixed her gaze, her attention and love all at once on Maluhaṇa. She fainted at the sight of Maluhaṇa who was smitten by the beauty of Maluhaṇī. Padmāvati, the mother of Maluhaṇī knowing Maluhaṇa to be rich enough, accepted Maluhaṇa, and converting the dancing stage of the temple into a nuptial hall, let them into a separate bed chamber wherein they both enjoyed their youthful love to the full extent for a period of ten years.

This incident of Maluhaṇa and Maluhaṇīs' falling in love with each other at first sight can aptly be compared to the incident of Romeo and Juliet, and Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā; their later separation is no exception. The contrast is that Romeo and Juliet, Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā are separated very early after their marriage for a long time but here Maluhaṇa is separated after a long time of their union (after ten years) only for a short while. This incident also resembles an incident of Kovalan's falling in love with a courtesan Mādhavī, though Kannaki was his married wife, in Śilappadigāram in Tamil, and Cārudatta falling in love with Vasantasenā in Mṛcchakaṭika in Sanskrit. The difference is that Cārudatta who was not rich, was attracted by the noble qualities of Vasantasenā. But Maluhaṇa and Kovalan are rich persons who loved courtesans, Maluhaṇī and Madhavī. They become extremely poor, giving everything to their beloveds. The other themes of justice in the country as is narrated in the poem Śilappadigāram, in the incident of the Pāṇḍya king ordering the death of Kovalan, on a false charge of theft is not found in Maluhaṇadevacarite. In the Śilappadigāram the poet Ilan̄ko deals with the significance of human achievements, the question of woman's importance in society, the idea of chastity (in the story of Kannakī the wife of Kovalan) and the problem of justice and the effect of miscarriage of justice (in the collapse of the ideals of kingly honour). In the Mṛcchakaṭika also we notice the problem of justice is treated, but not satisfactorily, because we find that wrong doers are not punished and the only good people suffer. The story of Maluhaṇa is free from the addition of such themes and has its own peculiar greatness in making the hero and the heroine obtain salvation by becoming the true devotees of Śiva, which is absent in the stories of either Romeo-Juliet, Kovalan-Kannakī, and of Cārudatta-Vasantasenā.

9. All the money was given to Maluhaṇī's mother Padmāvati, like Kovalan giving to Mādhavī in Śilappadigāram, and when the money that was reserved by Maluhaṇa's father (three crores and sixty lakhs of gold pieces) was lost within a period of ten years, Maluhaṇa became poor and was driven out of the house of Padmāvati. Though such a huge wealth was lost, Maluhaṇa's love towards Maluhaṇī never lessened. It was a pitiful sight for Maluhaṇī also who scolded her mother for her unkind act of driving out Maluhaṇa. She also had to suffer the pangs of separation from Maluhaṇa. Maluhaṇa with great difficulty came out of the house of Padmāvati and in the intensity of his passion saw the vision of Maluhaṇī in all the things around in the lotuses, in the bees and the sprouts, etc. He began to cry for her wherever he went. With such a deep-rooted love, one night he stood in front of the house of Maluhaṇī who was there in the upper story of her big mansion, and in the darkness one of Maluhaṇī's servants let fall on his body the filthy water that was used to wash the dish of Maluhaṇī after supper. Maluhaṇa then cried loudly 'Oh Maluhaṇī. Maluhaṇī! where art thou! Maluhaṇī?' Where upon Maluhaṇī recognising it to be the voice of Maluhaṇa came down the stairs and requested him to go home. The sight and the touch of Maluhaṇī again caused his body to become so hot that anything could be burnt when put upon his body. The separation of Maluhaṇī caused such a distress to Maluhaṇa that he stood before the house of Maluhaṇī throughout the whole night in the open air which was chilly, though his beloved went upstairs hoping that Maluhaṇa might return to his house. As it was a winter month, the snow began to fall and collect on the body of Maluhaṇa. Lots of snow settled on him and looked like a white covering (chaddar) for his body. He thus suffered throughout the night in that terrible cold. Harihara's power of expression is so great that he says that this freezing snow had a mere cooling action on his passion-heated body and that the heat of the body was so much that the whole water of the pond might have evaporated if he entered the pond.

In the morning, when Maluhaṇī saw Maluhaṇa, her sole lover, being tortured by the snow, she rushed to the spot where he was standing and felt that she was a sinner to have caused so much suffering for Maluhaṇa. She then took him out from the heap of snow and advised him to sing the glory of Lord Śiva and fix his passion on Him instead of on her so that he might obtain crores of Maluhaṇīs by His grace. Having received this advice from his beloved Maluhaṇī, Maluhaṇa went to the temple of Vijayeśvara, worshipped and meditated upon Him who being pleased by the severe penance-like worship and prayers of Maluhaṇa, granted a boon. Maluhaṇa immediately demanded that Lord Śiva, if He is gracious, may grant him his Maluhaṇī and nothing else. Lord Śiva granting this boon again told him that he would grant another boon, upon which Maluhaṇa prayed that he should live happily with Maluhaṇī for a hundred years and should attain His feet together with her after the hundred years. By the grace and mercy of God, Maluhaṇa obtained the desired object and married Maluhaṇī in the presence of the king of the country Pravarasena and the people. The gods also, being pleased, showered flowers upon the happy couple and smiled upon their marriage.

This story is really unique in the world's classics. Maluhaṇa, a Śaiva brahmin, becomes a great devotee of Śiva, only on the advice of a courtesan who is ultimately married by him and becomes his legal wife and attains the status of a gṛhīṇī. Harihara makes Maluhaṇī a rud-akannikā or a divine being.

10. Maluhaṇa's love towards Maluhaṇī is not an ordinary love motivated by mere lust or conjugal passion and happiness, but is pure, sacred and divine. He was ready to sacrifice even his body along with a huge stock of money for the sake of his beloved. It is divine love which is seen both in the hero and heroine of the poem.

11. The poem is revolutionary in the sense that it represents the marriage of a courtesan woman with a Kasmirean brahmin which is not perhaps sanctioned by the Sacred Books of the Hindus. Such a topic isolatedly is found in Mṛcchakaṭika (a Sanskrit drama) of Śūdraka wherein Cārudatta, a poor brahmin of the city of Ujjain marries a rich courtesan Vasantasenā and makes her the legal wife. In the end, in our present Kannaḍa work, a further step is achieved by the author saying that Maluhaṇa is converted also into a great devotee of Śiva on the advice of Maluhaṇī. The poet has combined the sentiment of love and the sentiment of devotion and built an edifice of devotion on the foundation of love. The poem gives a clue to the life of this Kasmirean poet, and forms the basis for the historians of Maluhaṇa's life.

12. It is believed that Harihara, in order to collect the material for his poem, travelled to Kashmir. This is supported by the evidence of his descriptions of the various buildings, flowers and crops of Kashmir and also by his mentioning of the name of contemporary king of Kashmir as Pravarasena. These clues to history are particularly interesting to all scholars and students of literary history.

13. It is difficult to say whether the social conditions depicted in the poem apply exclusively to Kashmir or to Karṇāṭak, since this is the life history of a historical person belonging to Kashmir written by a Karṇāṭak poet. It is safe to conclude that the author meant that courtesans, if good, could be married even by brahmins and that a courtesan can turn a lover into a true devotee. The poet instead of narrating her devotion towards God only indicates that she also was a true devotee of Śiva when she advised Maluhaṇa to worship Īśvara. We come to know that gold was in currency at the time when Harihara wrote this poem. Any way the study of his poems will certainly throw much light on the social conditions of his day.

14. The poet conveys the idea through this story, that money for the sons, if reserved by the parents, may, in all likelihood, be misused as in the case of Maluhaṇa. The fact that courtesans will drive people from their houses when their money is lost, is attested by the character of Padmāvatī who is only after money. Such incidents are abundant in Daśakumāracarita of Daṇḍin. The character of Maluhaṇī, though she is the daughter of a professional dancer Padmāvatī, is depicted nobly by the poet. Maluhaṇa also figures as a noble figure throughout the poem both in love towards his beloved and devotion towards God.

15. The poet takes us into a fairy dreamland by his delightful, lively and graphic descriptions throughout the poem. In one instance, while describing the youth of Maluhaṇa, the poet says that the body of Maluhaṇa was like a mirror to beautiful ladies. The poet has used here to suit his theme, an ornate and figurative style; perhaps not a single line is without figures of speech. The poem contains such figures like upamā, utprekṣā, vyatireka and atiśayokti.

His prose is simple but rhythmic. The poet has used alternatively, for variety, the prose which is scarcely found in Kannaḍa literature. He has used this simple prose for the quick narration of the story. The prose of Harihara has all the beauty of the prose of Daṇḍin but at the same time is free from Bāṇa's difficult compounds.

The chief cause of the popularity of his works is the facility of the poet's style of which this work is a fine example. Even prose is ornamented with the usual figures. The poet evinces a considerable power of imagination supplemented with the direct narration of the story. He does not add either anything which is inessential to the development of the story or leave anything which is essential.

16. The opportunity given to the youths of both the sexes in the days of the poet to form connections with one another in the temples and often fall in love with each other, was the characteristic of the day, and is also confirmed by one more such incident found in Cāmarasa's Prabhuliṅgalile – a Kannaḍa classic of the fifteenth century, which has been rendered into Tamil, Telugu, Marathi and Sanskrit in the old days, by the meeting of Prabhu and Māyādevī in a temple of Madhukēśvara in Banavāsi.

17. On the whole, we can conclude that the poet Harihara is one of those rare persons who have exceptional qualities of intelligence, wide observation and power of imagination. He is a star of the first magnitude in the galaxy of Kannaḍa poets.

INFLUENCE OF SANSKRIT ON TAMIL LITERATURE*

No clan or group of people can live in isolation unaffected by the contacts with other groups of people. Cultural contacts, political conquests and commercial enterprises bring together peoples of various groups. Such impacts when effected among the groups of varying standards in life, create, among peoples of lower standards, a liking for the concepts, matters, expressions and words of those who are superior to them and prompt them to borrow whatever is attractive and useful for them. Some of what is borrowed gets absorbed in them and ceases to be foreign. Others however remain with their specific nature to be used on occasions of importance.

Sanskrit is less influenced by the other languages of India which owe much to Sanskrit for their growth and development. The Tamil language, which belongs to the Dravidian group, bears the impact of Sanskrit, to a relatively small degree when compared to the other Indian languages. One specific feature, which the Tamil language reveals, is that what was borrowed was given a shape peculiarly belonging to Tamil. So to a superficial reader, the correspondence between the original Sanskrit word and its Tamilised form becomes scarcely noticeable.

Even in the centuries before the birth of Christ, the Sanskrit words got incorporated into Tamil literature. The Tolkappiyam, the earliest available work on Tamil grammar, recognises this and contains rules and illustrations for the Tamilised Sanskrit words. The works of the Saṅgam period use such words as if they are Tamil words. The Tamil epic *Ṣilappadikāram*¹ speaks of the necessity to know the beauties of the languages of other regions. The reputed Kavirippumpattinam is described to have peoples speaking various languages.²

Vīdi, kalāpam, śikaram,⁵ kāraṇam, nūpuram, nemi, *mekalai*⁴ and others occur in the literature of the Saṅgam period. *Thūṇam*⁵ (sthūṇā), koṭṭam (goṣṭha),⁶ kovalar (gopāla)¹, aravam (rava)⁸, āṇi (āṇi)⁹, eṇi (śreṇi)¹⁰ may also be added to this list.

According to Vararuci's Prākṛtaprakāśa, the Prākṛta forms of the Sanskrit words kumārī,¹¹ pāpa,¹² kopa,¹³ duḥkha,¹⁴ stambha,¹⁵ pattanam,¹⁶ sneha,¹⁷ padma,¹⁸ dhīratva,¹⁹ śūratva,²⁰ śukti,²¹ *kṛṣṇa*²² and *rakta*²³ are respectively kumārī, pāva, kova, dukkham, khambha, paṭṭaṇam, sineha, paduma, dhīratṭaṇam, śūratṭaṇam, sippī, kaṇho and raitam. Most of these words are identical with the words current in Tamil but the date of this work, which is placed in the sixth century A.D., does not give definite evidence in favour of Tamil having been influenced by this work; since, Sanskrit words were absorbed in the Tamil literature in the centuries even before the birth of Christ.

Learned words were also borrowed by the Tamil literature particularly in the subjects of music, dancing and philosophy. Several kinds of musical instruments and mode of playing on them are referred to in Tamil literature.²⁴ Nārada as an eminent player on the lute is mentioned²⁵ and the commentators find here a reference to the Nārada-śikṣā, a Sanskrit work on music.²⁶ Following the Sanskrit classics, the Tamil works classify

The technical words,³¹ which are used in several systems of thought, are used as they are, of course making them take a form after the Tamil system of word formation. For instance the word³² vipakkaikadesaviruttisapakkavyāpi is used for vipakṣaikaśavruttisapakṣavyāpi. There are references to the eight places of sound production,³³ to the lunar mansions,³⁴ and constellations.³⁵ The sentiments are enumerated as eight in some works³⁶ and as nine in others.³⁷ The vyabhicāribhāvas are thirty three³⁸ and the love stages are ten.³⁹ The *Tolkappiyam*⁴⁰ deals with the merits and defects in poetry. The literary manners (*riti*s) are three, as enumerated by Vāmana and the number of figures of sense (arthālaṅkāra) is thirty five.⁴¹ The world is referred to as made up of the five elements.⁴² The work kāra, which is used in Sanskrit literature to refer to the syllables, e.g., akāra, takāra, etc., is used by the grammarians of Tamil for a similar purpose, e.g., makāra.⁴³

The Brahmins came earlier than the Kṣatriyas and settled in the Tamil Nadu. They recited and taught the Vedas.⁴⁴ They became part of the peoples speaking Tamil. In fact some of them became poets and they were much respected in these regions.⁴⁵ The great sacrifices were performed by the Coḷa kings⁴⁶ and the marriage customs like coming round the fire were gone through with the help of these priests.⁴⁷

The Vedic deities such as Viṣṇu and Kāma, the God of love become popular along with Śiva, Durgā, Kumāra and others. Baladeva⁴⁸ and Kṛṣṇa had temples separately and Viṣṇu is referred to as foremost to be known through the Vedas.⁴⁹ The episodes connected with the divine descent of Viṣṇu as Kṛṣṇa are frequently referred to.⁵⁰ Along with the Vedic recitation, the Tamil songs were also sung in temples during worship.⁵¹

The Śilappadikāram contains the story of the mangoose which was killed by a brahmin woman who mistook it as having killed her child and put it to death.⁵² This story occurs in the Pāñcatantra from which this work takes the story. Peruṅkātai is a Tamil version of Guṇāḍhya's Bṛhatkathā.

There is a strange reference in these Tamil works to the use of Sanskrit words⁵³ to cajole and make the elephants take food.

Kamban⁵⁴, who is much indebted to Vālmīki's Rāmāyaṇa, is found to describe Daśaratha's old age in the words, "The white hairs on the cheek of Daśaratha appeared to secretly tell the king 'O King! give the kingdom to your son. You have reached the age for performing severe penance.'" This reminds to us of the following śloka of Kālidāsa⁵⁵

On account of the influence of Sanskrit on Tamil language and literature, the Tamil scholars who took to the study of Sanskrit evolved the Grantha system of alphabets, thus making Sanskrit familiar to the Tamilians. Another result was the rise and growth of the Maṇipravāla style, in which Sanskrit and Tamil got mixed up very freely. This happened between tenth and fifteenth centuries. In the field of drama and dance, Bharatasenāpatīyam of Ādivāyilar, Bharatasaṅgraha of Araṇvalartān, Abhinayadarpaṇam of Vīrarāghava Aiyar became prominent to represent Tamil writing and Daṇḍiyalaṅkāra and Māraṇālaṅkāra of Tirukkuruṅkaipparumāl Kavirāyar of the eleventh century in the field of rhetorics.

Notwithstanding the impact of Sanskrit, the Tamil literature has some noteworthy features. Firstly, whatever was borrowed was tamilised before making use of it. Secondly, prosody had an indigenous development which has nothing in common with Sanskrit. Kalippā and Veṇpā became well-known metres. Thirdly, dance postures were adopted to depict certain episodes. Death of Kṛṣṇa was adopted to *Alliyattokuṭi*⁵⁶ slaying of Sūra to Tuḍikkūttu,⁵⁷ rescuing Aniruddha from Bāṇa to *Kuḍakkūttu*⁵⁸ and so on. Fourthly, the words of foreign origin were avoided as far as possible. However, in some cases, the original Tamil words were superseded by Sanskrit words. The word uyir which means self came to possess less importance than the Sanskrit ātma becoming changed into ānmā. The word paśu is used in the sense of cow, although the words ā, ān and karavaī are available. The word paḍi, which is the tamilised form of the Sanskrit root pat, has replaced the word karraḷ. Fifthly, there is the division of subject matter into akam and puram. The former deals with the family life and the latter with the other aspects of life. This division is indigenous to Tamil literature. Lastly, etukai and monai, are two methods of using the syllables in versification and are peculiarly Tamil in origin. The same is the case with the antādi type. Curiously enough these last mentioned features are found employed in the Sanskrit work Sarvadevavilāsa, a campū belonging to the last century.

The religious poetry in the form of the compositions of the Āḷvārs and Nāyanmārs bear ample testimony to the selective use of the words and matters in the Sanskrit literature, employing the pure Tamil words to maximum effort and producing the most elegant and charming outpourings of lyrics that are the treasure and pride of Tamil literature.

TWO VERSIONS OF THE EKASAMJNĀDHİKĀRA

0.0 That the text of the Aṣṭādhyāyī had undergone some modifications in the wording as well as the order of the rules, sometimes leading to the evolution of different versions, is evident from the commentary of Patañjali. He makes it clear that two such versions have been evolved with regard to the text of rules read in the section of the Ekasamjñādhikāra. The present paper aims at bringing out some of the probable changes both in the wording and interpretation leading to emerging of the two versions.¹

1.0 Patañjali states that both the versions of the rules from I. iv. 1 to II. ii 38 are equally authentic². As the text adopted by Patañjali alone was followed by the later grammarians, the other went into oblivion. So no information regarding the latter version could be found in any of the later commentaries further to what is found in MB. The information that could be gleaned from MB evidences that the influence of one version over the other is so much that many a word in one version is incorporated in the other. Further some of the rules that fit in a particular context in one version are transferred to a different context in the other, some times even out of the Ekasamjñādhikāra.

1.1 Whatever might be the relative merits of the two versions both of them have a common aim, namely the prohibition of the concurrence of certain technical names. So the difference between the two versions lies only in the technic adopted in the presentation of rules. But when the order or the wording of the rules is disturbed the interpretation also changes. Consequently the meta-rule which supplies the principle of interpreting the rules in this section is read in two ways: i) ākāḍārād ekā saṃjñā and ii) prāk kaḍārāt paraṃ kāryam. The difference between the two readings is that while the former purports a restrictive injunction (niyama-vidhi) the latter a prescriptive injunction (vidhi=apūrva-vidhi).³ The rule ākāḍārād ekā saṃjñā is a restrictive injunction inasmuch as it permits the operation of only one saṃjñā at a time indicating that it presupposes the simultaneous application of more than one saṃjñā at a particular instance.⁴ When the concurrence of names is required some device to nullify the operation of the rule should be adopted; for which purpose the Ekasaṃjñādhikāravādin takes recourse of the principle of anuvṛtti.

1.2. The Paraṃkārya-pakṣa is evolved to avoid anuvṛtti as it involves the additional effort in the form of reading the rule as an adhikāra or adding the particle ca or taking recourse to a jñāpaka.⁵ Consequently the text of the Ekasaṃjñādhikāra version is modified both in order and wording in such a way that the concurrence of desired saṃjñās is effected without any prejudice to the purport of the rules.

The rule prāk kaḍārāt paraṃ kāryam, being a prescriptive injunction ordains the application of that saṃjñā which is succeeding (para) in the Sūtra-text, in case of a conflict.⁶ Here the word para in the rule is indicative of the prevalence of bādhyabādhakabhāva among the technical names read under this section and it stands for the name which has a chance to be superseded by the former one.⁷ When the concurrence is desired the niravakāśa name is read as preceding the sāvakāśa. Even though the meta-rule sets at naught the niravakāśa-samjñā, the concurrence is justified on the strength of ārambhasāmarthya.⁸ In other words, if the sāvakāśa name supersedes the niravakāśa, the mention of the latter as a preceding one not only becomes purposeless but also superfluous. So as to avoid this contingency the niravakāśa should also be admitted as coming into operation because of its very formation, i.e. ārambhasāmarthya.

On the other hand when the concurrence of samjñās is to be prohibited, the sāvakāśa is read as preceding the niravakāśa and consequently the meta-rule sets at naught the application of the preceding name when the succeeding has a chance to apply.⁹ Both of them do not have any chance of simultaneous application because there is no room for the superfluity of either of the samjñās (on account of the sāvakāśa-samjñā is applicable to the cases other than those of the niravakāśa-samjñā). Thus the Paramkāryavādin need not change the rules of the Ekasamjñādhikāravādin either in order or wording for the prohibition of the simultaneous operation of samjñās.

When there is the conflict of equal force (tulyabalavirodha), the immediately following rule *vipratīṣedhe ca*¹⁰ ordains the application of the succeeding rule in the order of the Sūtra-text.

13 So the evolution of the two versions is due to the difference in the technic adopted in effecting the concurrence of technical names in the section of their prohibition.

20 Now we shall examine how the Paramkāryavādin would avoid the anuvṛtti for the concurrence and how he would read his Sūtra-text.

2.1 In the case of the concurrence of kāraka, nipāta and samāsa with their sub-class names, there is no other way for the Paramkāryavādin than to read them as adhikāras as in the version of the Ekasamjñādhikāra-pakṣa.¹¹ So the question of modifying the order arises only in the instances in which the concurrence of the terms is indicated by ca in the Ekasamjñādhikāra. The rules are modified in such a way that the

10. The words param and kāryam as found in the rule vipratīṣedhe paraḥ kāryam of the set of rules suited to the Ekasamjñādhikāra need not be read in this version because they are taken from the previous rule to this by anuvṛtti.

niravakāśa always follows the sāvakāśa-saṃjñā and the particle ca is elided. The text of the rules as suggested by Patañjali may be shown as follows :¹²

	Ekasaṃjñādhikāra	Paraṃkāryavāda
1) I. iv. 42	sādhakatamaṃ karaṇam	divaḥ sādhakatamaṃ karma ¹²
	43 divaḥ karma ca	karaṇam

3) I. iv. 59	upasargāḥ kriyāyoge	upasargāḥ kriyāyoge ¹³
	60 gatiś ca	gatiḥ

2.2 With regard to the concourse of karmadhāraya and dvigu with taipuruṣa, the order of the rules will be as follows. Firstly the rule taipuruṣaḥ samānādhikaraṇaḥ karmadhārayaḥ (I ii.42) defining the scope of application of the name is dropped altogether. To get the same effect the word karmadhārayaḥ is added to the rule II.i.49 reading as pūrvakālaikasarvajaratpurāṇanavakevalāḥ samānādhikaraṇena karmadhārayaḥ. And the rules from II.i.22 to 48 are read after enunciating all the rules relating to karmadhāraya (i.e. II.i.49 to 72) so that the name karmadhāraya comes into operation along with taipuruṣa on account of its formation.¹⁴ Secondly the rule dviguś ca (II.i.23) is dropped. And for the concourse of dvigu with taipuruṣa the Paraṃkāryavādin need not modify the rule saṃkhyāpūrvo dviguḥ (II.i.52).¹⁵ So the rules may be arranged as follows:

	Ekasaṃjñādhikāra	Paraṃkāryavāda
II.i.22	taipuruṣaḥ	pūrvakālaikasarvajaratpurāṇanavakevalāḥ samānādhikaraṇena karmadhārayaḥ

12. gatiḥ divaḥ karmahetumatsu cagrahaṇam, MB. I. iv. 1, Vt, p. 276.

13. ibid. As the upasarga-saṃjñā is actually a niravakāśa with reference to gati, the order of the rules is not changed except dropping the particle ca.

2.3 Of the three instances, in which the anuvṛtti is justified on the strength of jñāpaka in the Ekasamjñādhikāra version,¹⁶ there is no necessity in this version either for jñāpaka or for the change of rules for the concourse of nadī and ghi with guru and laghu respectively. According to this version, even if the vowels i and u are taken as ghi, and ī and ū as nadī without resorting to take them as i-ending and u-ending feminine stems for ghi, and i-ending and ū-ending feminine stems for nadī both of them come into operation with reference to laghu and guru respectively. The terms laghu and guru, however, come into operation being next in the succession.¹⁷

2.31 With reference to the concourse of aṅga with pada and bha the order of the rules is suggested as follows¹⁸

	Ekasamjñādhikāra	Paramkāryavāda
I. iv. 13	yasmāt pratyayavidhis tadādi pratyaye 'ṅgam	yasmāt pra:yayavidhis tadādi suptināntam padam

2.32 As for the concourse of parasmaipada and puruṣa, the rules relating to puruṣa, i.e. I. iv. 101 to 108 are read before the rules relating to parasmaipada, i.e. I. iv. 99 & 100.¹⁹

3.0 Even though this version exhibits the economy of words indicative of concourse of names, it is not free from the flaws of over pervasion. There are certain instances that go against the rule prāk kaḍā-rāt param kāryam in which the niravakāśa that has to supersede the sāvakāśa precedes the other. For example nadī (I. iv. 6) and ghi (I. iv. 7) get a chance for simultaneous operation in the declension of the feminine words ending in ī and ū when the declensional ending possesses the indicatory ñ (ñit), i.e. before the singular case-affixes of dative, ablative, genitive and locative.²⁰ Thus in the derivation of the dative singular of śakaṭi, the augment ā (āṭ) is added to the case ending in ē (ñe) by the rule āṇ nadyāḥ (V. iii. 112) as the nadī-samjñā will operate according to the rule niti hrasvaś ca (I. iv. 6) when it is in the stage of śakaṭi + ā + e. If the ghi-samjñā also operates, i of the stem is substituted by guṇa (e) and consequently the form śakaṭyai cannot be secured.²¹ Hence to prevent the concourse of names the word śeṣa is added to the rule I. iv. 7.

However in this case the absence of the concourse of technical names can be justified even without the word śeṣa in the rule, on the validity of the Paninian rule itself. Should ghi operate in the derivation of śakaṭyai, it must come into force before nadī, because it is antarānga with reference to nadī. If it comes into operation before nadī, the final vowel of the stem is substituted by guṇa and as such nadī cannot operate because the essential condition for the operation of nadī, namely the stem should end in ī or ū is not satisfied. Even the sthānivadbhāva cannot be considered because it is prohibited in the case of alvidhi by the rule sthānivad ādeśo 'nalvidhau, (I. i. 56). Hence the framing of the rule necessitates the non-concourse of samjñās.²²

19. pūrvā tasya puruṣasamjñā parā parasmaipadasamjñā, ibid. p. 280.

20. itarathā hi paramkāryatvāc ca ghisamjñā, ārambhasāmarthyāc ca 'niti hrasvaś ca' iti nadīsamjñā, MB. I. iv. 1, p. 282.

21. śakaṭiśabdān nēpratyaye kṛte paratvān naṭīsamjñānimittē ṛṇi kṛte tasya nidbhaktatvāt 'gher niti' iti guṇaḥ prāpnoti, KP. ibid.

22. yady atra ghisamjñā pravarteta tadāntaraṅgatvāt pūrvam eva tasyāḥ pravṛttiḥ syāt. nadīsamjñā tu nīpratyayīpekṣayā bahi āgā. tatra ghilakṣaṇe guṇe kṛte hrasvābhāvād alvidhitvāc ca sthānivadbhāvān nadīsamjñā naiva pravarteteti nadīsamjñāvidhānam hrasvavyūnarthakam eva syāt. tasmānnadīsamjñā vidhānasāmarthyād atrū ghisamjñā na bhavattīti, ibid.

3.1 But the word śeṣa in the rule śeṣo bahuvrihiḥ (II. ii. 23) is essential to prevent the application of the bahuvrihi-samjñā to the avyayibhāva and taipuruṣa compounds when their sense is something other than that is conveyed by the constituents (anyapadārtha).²³ For example the avyayibhāvas like unmattagaṅgam and lohitagaṅgam in the sense of a proper noun, the upamānasamāsas like śaṣṭrīśyāmā in the sense of the upameya, the dvigu-samāsas like pañcagavam and daśagavam in the sense of aggregation (samāhara), the kr̥llopa-samāsas like niṣkauśāmbiḥ and nirvāraṇāsikḥ in the sense of krānta, etc., are ordained in anyapadārtha by the rules anyapadārthe ca samjñāyām (II. i. 21), upamānāni sāmānyavacanaiḥ (II. i. 55), taddhitārthottarapadasamāhāre ca (II. i. 51) and kugatiprādayaḥ (II. ii. 18) respectively. In order to prevent such concurrence the word śeṣa is incorporated in the rule. The word śeṣa is taken as referring to only those instances in which no compound is ordained.²⁴ The bahuvrihi-samjñā does not operate in the above cases because the word śeṣa prevents the application of it for the compounding of those words has already been enjoined by the preceding rules.

3.2 Similarly the names pada and bha get a chance to operate simultaneously before the pratyaya which has s for it.²⁵ For example the Vedic form ṛtviya (RV. 3. 19. 10) cannot be secured because of the operation of the pada-samjñā on account of its formation (ārambhasāmarthyā) as well as bha-samjñā on account of its being next in the succession (paramkāryatva).²⁶ The word ṛtu takes the secondary suffix ghas by chandasi ghas (V. i. 106) and ghas is substituted by iya by āyan-ey-in-iy-iyah pha-ḍha-kha-cha-ghām^o (VII. i. 2). Ṛtu+iya becomes ṛtviya. If bha-samjñā were to appear there, u would have taken guṇa by the rule or guṇaḥ (VI. iv. 146) and consequently the form ṛtviya cannot be secured.

4.0 As we do not have at hand the full text of the paramkārya as it was available to Patañjali, we cannot positively say how far this version had been influenced by the other. As regards the influence of the Paramkārya-pakṣa prevailed upon the Ekasamjñādhikāra, we may note two instances.

23. bahuvrihipratishedhārthaṃ tu śeṣagrahaṇaṃ kartavyam - 'śeṣo bahuvrihiḥ' iti. kim prayojanam? prayojanam avyayibhāvopamānadvigukr̥llopeṣu, MB. ibid.
 24. yeṣāṃ padānāṃ yasminn arthe 'vyayibhāvādikāḥ samāso na vihitāḥ sa śeṣa ity arthaḥ, PM. II. ii. 23.
 25. paravacane siti padam bham, MB. I. iv. 1, p. 280.
 26. 'āyam te yonir ṛtviyaḥ'. 'prajāṃ vindāma ṛtviyām'. ārambhasāmarthyāc ca padasamjñā, paramkāryatvāc ca bhasamjñā prāpnoti, ibid.

4.1 The addition of the word śeṣa in the rules śeṣo ghy asakhi (I. iv. 7) and śeṣo bahuvrīhiḥ (II. ii. 23) is redundant in this school because the rule ākāḍārād ekā samjñā itself prevents the concourse of names.²⁷ In the case of śeṣo bahuvrīhiḥ the word śeṣa is justified as referring to 'the triad of the nominative case-affixes'.²⁸ But in fact even without this interpretation the bahuvrīhi does not have any chance to operate along with tatpuruṣa. In the case of the other rule śeṣo ghy asakhi there cannot be any justification for the word śeṣa.

4.2 As Patañjali observes, the rule sarūpāṇām ekaśeṣa ekavibhaktau (I ii. 64) and the other following rules of the ekaśeṣa topic are read immediately after the rule I. iv. 1 in the Ekasamjñādhikāra section. He also observes that the word eka in I. iv. 2 is taken to the following rule by anuvṛtti.²⁹ The present position of the ekaśeṣa section in the second pāda of first Adhyāya might be due to the influence of the other version.

CONCLUSION

5.0 The above discussion may yield the following conclusions:

(1) The reason for the evolution of the two versions is a 'splenetic hankering after brevity'.³⁰ It is evident that the Paramākārya-pakṣa is an offshoot to eliminate the adoption of the principle of anuvṛtti. The attempts to critically examine the Paninian technic might have begun soon after it gained recognition and was introduced among the learned circles as an authority over the classical language. Such an appraisal might have led to the evolution of different versions.

(2) Even earlier to the composition of the vārttikas by Kātyāyana, two versions for the text of I. iv. to II. ii might have come into vogue, as the Vārttikakāra discusses the advantages as well as disadvantages of both the versions. This may suggest that there was a long gap between Pāṇini and Kātyāyana, although it is not clear which of the two versions is more acceptable to the Vārttikakāra.

(3) Patañjali accepts the version of the Ekasaṁjñādhikārapakṣa as more advantageous than the other. Nāgeśa observes that the version of the Paramkārya-pakṣa has been abandoned by Patañjali because it gives room for the undesirable concourse of saṁjñās in places like unmattagaṅgam and ṛtviya. Expressed otherwise, the bahuvrīhi cannot be prevented from the operation in the case of avyayībhāva compounds even when the word śeṣa is added to the rule II. ii. 23. In the case of the derivation of the word ṛtviya the concourse of pada with bha cannot be averted.

(4) The later followers of Patañjali have followed suit and as such no serious attempt has been made to inquire into the text as handed down by Patañjali. Even though several amendations to the rules are suggested by some later grammarians, none of them is incorporated in the text.³¹

31 For example Bhaṭṭoji Dīkṣita observes that the rule taipuruṣaḥ samānādhikāraṇaḥ karmadhārayaḥ (I ii. 42) may be dropped and to get the same effect another rule as karmadhārayaś ca may be read at the end of the section of rules under the adhikāra of samānādhikāraṇa (ref. ŚK. I. iv. 1, p. 97). Haradatta refers to a suggestion of some thinkers that the word karmadhāraya may be included in the rule II. i. 23 as dvigukarmadhārayaś ca, so that both the dvigu and karmadhāraya get the nomenclature taipuruṣa. In such a case the rule I. ii. 42 is to be read after enunciating the rules of karmadhāraya as the rule II. i. 52 is read after I. i. 51 (ref. PM. I. ii. 42).

Dr. V.N. HARI RAO

A NOTE ON THE DATE OF VEDĀNTADEŚIKA

Our only source for an understanding of the date of Vedāntadeśika is the traditional account as enshrined in the Guruparamparas, the exactitude of which cannot be checked from independent sources. An attempt is made here to examine the allusions made in his account to known historical facts. Born in Kali 4370 or A.D. 1268 he grew-up to be a child prodigy and before his twentieth year he had mastered the Vedānta and Prabandā lore. He was soon chosen as the pontiff of the Vaiṣṇava-maṭha at Kanchipuram. Then he went to Tiruvabīndrapuram where he stayed for a few years and then returned to Kanchi. At his headquarters he stayed for a few years before he started on a religious tour of the sacred Vaiṣṇava shrines of the north. In the course of this tour he met Vidyāraṇya, the saint who is said to have blessed the foundation of Vijayanagar by Harihara and Bukka (A.D. 1336).

Subsequent to his return to Kanchipuram from his northern tour he was called upon to go over to Srirangam to meet the challenge of some skilled Advaitin debaters. This he did successfully and assumed, under divine command, the headship of the Vaiṣṇava-maṭha of Srirangam.

Vedāntadeśika's assumption of leadership at Srirangam must have happened soon after Malik Kafur's raid in A.D. 1310-11. In connection with his stay at Srirangam we are referred to only one Muslim invasion, and that was the one headed by Ulugh Khan in A.D. 1323. It could not have been the earlier invasion because, according to tradition, Vedāntadeśika was actively engaged in Srirangam for some years with the peaceful task of religious instruction and writing before he had to face the Muslim invasion and sack of the temple; and if this invasion were the one which occurred in A.D. 1310-11 it is not possible to accommodate the period of his activetay at Srirangam between the year of of his assumption of the pontificate in that shrine, which according to tradition took place sometime after his 40th year (say A.D. 1309 or 1310), and the invasion (i.e., A.D. 1311). Allowing about a few years for his active stay at Srirangam we get, assuming that the invasion he faced was that of A.D. 1310-11, the year A.D. 1300 for his assumption of the pontificate, i.e., in his 31st year. But according to well known tradition he was in Tiruvahīndrapuram and Kanchipuram in his 30th year, and after his stay in these places he undertook an extensive tour in the north. After his return to Kanchipuram he was called upon to defend Vaishnavism from the attacks of the Māyāvādins (Advitins) at Srirangam. His stay at Srirangam was not only active but profoundly fruitful. He carried on; at the same time, with considerable endurance and persistence the prodigious task of delivering religious lectures and writing out commentaries as well as original works both in Tamil and Sanskrit. The long list of works contained in the traditional accounts could not have been the product of one or two years. Thus it is clear that the Muslim invasion that Deśika had to face was that of Ulugh Khan (A.D. 1323).

The period of Vedāntadeśika's exile from Srirangam was a long one, i.e., from A.D. 1323 to 1371. During this period he was called upon to sit in judgment over the religious disputation between Vidyāraṇya and Akṣobhya. As the debate is said to have been held in Vijayanagar Deśika might have proceeded to the capital from Satyamangalam or Melkote. As it is known that Akṣobhya had occupied the Madhva pontifical seat between the years A.D. 1350 and 1367 it may reasonably be presumed that Deśika's arbitration, referred to by the Vaibhava-prakāśikā must have taken place sometime between these two dates.

According to the Vaḍakalai tradition, as noticed by the Prapannāmṛtam, the verses of Gopānārya's inscription in the Srirangam temple (dated Śaka 1293, A.D. 1371) dealing with the restoration were composed by Vedāntadeśika, who returned to Srirangam from his exile and witnessed in great delight the reconsecration of the images. The Guruparampara says that Vedāntadeśika breathed his last in Kali 4470 or A.D. 1368. Laying too much emphasis on the traditional dates (which credit Deśika with a life of exactly a century, i.e., from Kali 4370 to 4470) some scholars have questioned the date of this inscription, nay the validity of the epigraph itself, which is said to be unusual in character. Vedāntadeśika, who died in A.D. 1368, we are told, could not have witnessed the reconsecration and composed the verses in praise of Gopana in A.D. 1371. Hence the restoration of the temple must have taken place sometime before A.D. 1369.¹ Clearly it is not valid to question the inscription and its date on the basis of tradition. Either Vedāntadeśika did not compose the verses or he died sometime after A.D. 1371. The latter is the more probable alternative. Subsequent to the restoration Vedāntadeśika settled, according to tradition, once again in Srirangam and spent a few years in peaceful religious activity before his death, during which period he wrote his Rahasyatrayasāra, elaborately explaining the doctrine of prapatti. For the sake of convenience we may assume that Vedāntadeśika died in A.D. 1380; and striking to tradition, which credits him with a hundred years, his life may be said to have extended from A.D. 1280 to 1380.

1. Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, XXIV, p. 308. f.n. 2.

CERTAIN ASPECTS OF CASTE SYSTEM AMONG THE SOUTHERN TAMILS AT THE BEGINNING OF MODERN TIMES

The present paper represents an attempt to depict the caste system as it worked among the people of the southern region of Tamilnadu during the eighteenth century.

The period was marked by the absence of any regular government. In consequence valour and strength offered the scope to one caste to elevate itself above the other. This inevitably attracted the castes, prone to violence, to the profession of arms, and left others to cultivate the arts of peace. The Marawas, Kallans and Totiens, the three warlike communities belonged to the former category, while the other castes, especially the Brahmins, Vellalars, Nadars and Parayas to the latter. The armed groups were essentially aggressive in their outlook but the peace loving groups were defensive.

The Marawas, fierce and warlike, formed the dominant people in Ramnad and Sivaganga. Trained for war and plunder, they marched against the villages of other inhabitants, attacked them mercilessly and exacted tributes. They considered it a disgrace to possess soft womanly hands, to bear no scars of deep and ghastly sword thrusts, to remain ignorant of the use of bow and arrow and to eat food, which their own hands honestly procured. True to this conviction, they struck terror and awe wherever their raiding spirit carried them. Serving in the armed establishments of the local rulers, they held a status like that of the Rajputs in Rajputana. The Marawas worshipped Siva and numerous devils of whom Cudalai Madan was the most conspicuous.¹

1. Rev. T.B. Pandyan, Ancient Heroes of South Indian Peninsula, p. 19.

The Kallans, another warlike community, inhabited largely in Pudukkottai, Nattam and Melur. The inhabitants of Pudukkottai took pride in agricultural pursuits but those of Nattam and Melur did not hesitate to commit any sort of excess and cruelty. Their boys of the age between ten and twelve displayed an extraordinary propensity for thieving. When they reached the age of fifteen, they were considered proficient in carrying off an object that tempted them. Some religious ceremonies were then performed, the hair was allowed to grow and the boy was presented with a young woman in marriage as a reward for his daring interpidity in robbery. The Kallans, as they were so trained, robbed the merchants and plundered the villages. However, they permitted the travellers to insure against robbery by paying a certain fee to any member of their tribe. In that case a young Kallar girl would conduct the traveller through their territory to safety. She would keep her finger on her ear, which was the sign to the other Kallans to observe restraint. Still if any, unable to resist their temptation, robbed the traveller, she would tear her ear lap immediately and report the matter to the leader of the tribe. The chief, thereupon, would summon the guilty to his council, impose a fine and tear off their ear laps in expiation of their crime.

The Totiens, also called as Kambalatars, were Telugus by descent. Mostly, they had settled in the plains of eastern Tirunelveli. Though warlike, they possessed a strong inclination to obtain property in land. In general they were Vaishnavites, but the different families had their own household deities. The members of this community settled their disputes through their jury.²

By virtue of their profession the Brahmins held a high status in the society. As it was the traditional practice, they officiated at Hindu worship, temple ceremonies and marriage functions, blessed the homes and purified the unclean. Added to these, they indicated lucky days for undertaking a work, drew the horoscope of the infants and warded off the curses haunting them. Better educated than the other communal groups, the Brahmins displayed an inclination to serve in the administration too.³

The Vellalars and the Nadars were mostly peasants. A numerous section, the Vellalars spoke a pure dialect of Tamil, took interest in agriculture and distinguished as soldiers and administrators. The Nadars were mostly found in Tirunelveli and Ramnad. They engaged themselves in cultivation, trade and toddy tapping. As the Vellalars did, they worshipped Śiva but in the place of the Brahmins their barbers officiated at their social functions. Though many of them embraced Christianity, they did not allow their religious differences to disturb their communal harmony.⁴

The Parayas and Pallars were the field workers and the Parawas were the fishermen. In spite of the great services that they did to the society, they were so detested that they were treated as untouchables, beaten by the caste-Hindus at pleasure and compelled to reside outside the towns. Nevertheless they too had their own sub-castes, some of which claiming superiority over the rest. In addition to these castes there were artisans called Panchalas, washermen, barbers and the nomadic tribes. The Kuravas were the wandering traders and fortune tellers. Each tribe of them having its distinct customs and habits and governed by an elected chief constituted an independent republic.

The prominence claimed by some castes by virtue of their attitude towards violence and superiority assumed by some others on ground of birth kept alive a diversity of social customs and habits. This on the one hand rendered certain sections of the population aggressive and on the other left the inferior groups downtrodden. An interplay of these factors accounted for the evils in the social set up.

The importance given to the profession of arms led some communities to consider themselves more destined for warfare than for the cultivation of the arts of peace. They looked upon a martial career for seeking their fortune. As they neglected the finer aspects of life, they lived in a state of ignorance. Even on every trifling occasion their disposition seemed prone to quarrels, often terminating in blood. They practised the law of retaliation very strictly. The Marawas and the Kallans in particular possessed an aptitude to maintain with violence an opinion once formed, whether it was right or wrong. No wonder, the British administrators entertained a view that they could at the most be driven but could not be led.⁵ Another ostensible tendency was to consider large sections of the people as socially inferior. The contempt with which they were treated was carried to that extent as to believe that their presence or even their foot prints contaminated the surrounding area. For instance a member of a community that was considered low was forbidden from going to a Brahmin locality. Should he do so the Brahmin had the right to inflict severe punishment. It was considered a total contamination to eat food prepared by a member of the so called low caste or to eat with him or to drink water brought by him, to use a vessel held by him or to set foot inside his house. The contaminated person lost his caste. There was provision for remedy, which consisted of elaborate ceremonies dominated by a series of baths. So much was the obsession in the preservation of purity that the caste Hindus wasted their time and left the intruders free to assert their political authority and practice tyranny over the country.

Indeed the society functioned under numerous limitations. Mutual hatred and suspicion led to internal dissensions and external interventions. The habit to view the things through the angle of caste discouraged new thoughts and new enterprises. The absence of freedom to take up a career of one's instinct contributed to economic stagnation. A conviction that they were born in subordination and as inferior to others was so strongly ingrained in the minds of the people, who felt themselves low, that it never occurred to them that their fate was anything but irrevocable.⁶ A total want of adventure and enterprise in consequence marked their outlook. This ruled out the possibility of any improvement of the condition of the population.

‘The tenets of the revived Veera Saiva religion, rules of conduct, criticism of ignorance and superstition and blind worship of tradition, dignity of labour and equality of Man — and many such ideas are expressed in pithy, homely, eloquent and illustrative language. The style is not metrical, nor is it prose as we understand it generally.’
— Adya Rangacharya.

‘In form, the Vachanas are brief disconnected paragraphs each ending with one or another of the numerous local names under which Siva is worshipped. In style, they are epigrammatical, parallelistic and allusive. They dwell on the vanity of riches, the valuelessness of mere rites or book-learning, the uncertainty of life and the spiritual privileges of the Siva Bhakta.’

తెలుగున కూడ ఇట్టి వచనములు వెలువడినవి కృష్ణమాచార్యులు రచించిన ‘సింహగిరి నరహరి వచనములు’ లేక ‘కృష్ణమాచార్య వచనములు’, తాళ్ళపాక వెదలిడుమలా చార్యుని ‘వేంకటేశ్వర వచనమాలికా గీతములు’ లేక ‘వేంకటేశ్వర వచనములు’ ఇట్టివి. ఇవికాక యముద్రితస్థితిలో నున్న భవానీశంకర వచనములు మున్నగునవి కన్నడ సాహిత్యములోని యీ ప్రక్రియను పోలియున్నవి.

4. కిశిపాట్లు :

కిశిపాట్లు అను సాహిత్యప్రక్రియ మలయాళమున క్రీ.శ. 16, 17 శతాబ్దాల నడిమికాలములో వ్యాప్తిలోనికి వచ్చెను. 'కిశిపాట్లు' అనగా చిలుకపాట యని యర్థము. దీనికి మళయాళ సాహిత్యమున నొక విశిష్ట మగు స్థానము కలదు. ఇందు సాధారణముగా నాధ్యాత్మిక విషయములు ఆభివర్ణింపఁబడును. కాలక్రమమున నాధ్యాత్మిక విషయములు కానివి కూడ నీ ప్రక్రియకు చెందిన గ్రంథములలో చోటు చేసికొనెను. ఎళత్తచ్చకా మహాకవి సుకుమార హస్తమున నీ ఛందోవిశేషము అందాలు దిద్దుకొనిన దని చెప్పవచ్చును. ఈ ప్రక్రియకు చెందిన కావ్యముయొక్క ప్రారంభమునందు ఒక చిలుక యా కావ్యమును చెప్పునున్నట్లుగా రచింపఁబడును. కొన్ని కావ్యములలో నీ చిలుకకు బదులుగా హంసగాని తుమ్మెదగాని యుండును. అయినను వానికి 'కిశిపాట్లు' అనియే వ్యవహారము. ఎళత్తచ్చకా కిశిపాట్లును వ్యాప్తిలోనికి గొనివచ్చుట నిజమే యయినను సతనికి పూర్వమే కిశిపాట్లు లన దగినవి కొన్ని వెలసెను. దీని పుట్టుపూర్వోత్తరములను గుఱించి పండితులలో భేదాభిప్రాయములు కలవు సరస్వతి చేతిలోని చిలుకయే కిశిపాట్లులోని చిలుక యని కొందఱి యభిప్రాయము. పౌరాణిక గాథానిధి యగు శుకమహర్షికి చిహ్నముగ దీనియందు చిలుక నిలుపఁబడె నని మఱికొందఱి యభిప్రాయము. భగవంతుఁడు తొలుత ఎళత్తచ్చకాకు చిలుక

5. గాథ :

మలయాళ సాహిత్యమున 'పాట్లు' అనఁబడు జానపదగేయ రచనలు జాగుగా ప్రచారమునకు వచ్చినపిదప సంస్కృత వాఙ్మయమునందలి యితివృత్తములు, అందలి భావములు క్రమముగా కొలది చోటు చేసికొనుటకు ప్రయత్నింపఁజొచ్చెను. తత్ఫలితముగా జానపదకవుల స్థానమును విద్వాంసు లయిన మళయాళ కవులు స్వీకరించి సంస్కృత వాఙ్మయమునందలి యితివృత్తమును మలయాళములో కావ్యరూపమున రచించుటకు నారంభించిరి. ఇతివృత్తము సంస్కృత మూలకమే యయినను కేరళ దేశమునందలి ప్రజలలో మిక్కిలి ప్రచారము పొందిన, ప్రజాదరము చూఱగొనిన దేశిఛందస్సులలో కావ్యరచనము గావించుట వారికి తప్పనిసరి యయ్యెను. దీని మూలమున కొంత విశిష్టమగు సాహిత్యము మలయాళమున క్రీ.శ 15 వ శతాబ్దమునుండి వెలయ నారంభించినది. ఇట్లు ప్రాచీనకాలమున మలయాళమునందు వెలసిన ప్రశస్తకావ్యములలో చెరుశేరి నంబూద్రి రచించిన 'కృష్ణగాథ' యొకటి. దీనికే 'కృష్ణపాట్లు' అని కూడ నామాంతరము కలదు ఈ కావ్య నామమునుబట్టి యిందలి యితివృత్తము కృష్ణునికి సంబంధించిన కథ యని తెలియుచున్నప్పటికిని ఇందలి 'గాథ' యనుమాటకు మలయాళమున నొక విశిష్టార్థము కలదు. కృష్ణగాథ కావ్యము అంతకు మునుపు మలయాళములోని పాట్లులలో స్వీకరింపఁబడిన దేశిఛంద మగు 'మఃజరీ' ఛందమున వ్రాయఁబడినది. తరువాతి కాలమున ఈ ఛందస్సు నందు వ్రాయఁబడిన కావ్యమునకే 'గాథ' యను వ్యవహార మేర్పడెను. ఇందుచే కృష్ణగాథ యనుచో గాథపదమునకు కథ యను సామాన్యార్థమే కాక 'మంజరీఛందస్సునందు రచింపఁబడిన కావ్యము' అను ప్రత్యేకార్థ మొకటి యేర్పడెను. తరువాతి కాలమున మలయాళమునం దెన్నియో గాథా కావ్యములు వెలసినవి. చెరుశేరి నంబూద్రి కృష్ణగాథ యను కావ్యమునే కాక భారతగాథ యను మఱొక కావ్యమును కూడ రచించిరట్లు తెలియు

చున్నది. కృష్ణగాథను రచించిన చెరుశ్శేరి సంబుద్రియే భారతగాథను కూడ సంతరించి యుండ నోపు నని బాలకృష్ణనాయర్ మొదలగు పండితులు విశ్వసించిరి కాని మహాకవి ఉక్కురు పరమేశ్వర అయ్యరు భారతగాథ యందలి గుణదోషముల నెత్తిచూపి కృష్ణగాథను సంతరించిన కవియే భారతగాథను కూడ రచించెననుట యసంగత మని తెలియజేసిరి. కనుక భారతగాథ చెరుశ్శేరిచే కాక మఱొకచెవరి చేతనో రచింప బడిన దని కొందఱు విద్వాంసుల యభిప్రాయము

‘The logical outcome of this infiltration was a change in literary propensities and the replacement of unlettered bards by more learned ones who, while adopting the same musical folk metres could compose on the popular exotic themes. It was a beneficent change, for it enriched Malayalam with an excellent body of noble literature..... Presumably most of the ballads extant now might have been composed after Krishna Gadha. But they marked the culmination of the literary traditions of a much earlier origin’.

6. సందేశకావ్యము :

మలయాళ సాహిత్యమునందు ఒకానొకకాలమున సందేశ కావ్యరచనము మిక్కిలి వ్యాప్తిలో నుండెను. ‘Samdesa kavyas or Messenger Poems have always held a pre-eminent position in the literature of Kerala.’ భారతదేశమునందలి యితర భాషాప్రాంతములకంటె నెక్కువగా నీ సందేశ కావ్యరచనము కేరళమున మిక్కిలి వ్యాప్తి నందినది. కేరళవిద్వాంసులు ఒక్క మలయాళమునందు మాత్రమేకాక సంస్కృతము నందుకూడ పెక్కు సందేశకావ్యములను రచించి యుండుట మనము గుర్తింపవలసి యున్నది. క్రీ.శ. 10 వ శతాబ్దియందు కేరళమున రచింపబడిన కుకసందేశ కావ్యము సంస్కృత సాహిత్యములోనే మేఘసందేశమునకు తరువాత పేర్కొనదగిన గ్రంథము. ఇదికాక చాచక సందేశము, భ్రమర సందేశము, కోకిల సందేశము మొదలగు కావ్యములు కేరళమున సంస్కృత భాషలో రచితము లయినవి. ప్రణయ భావములను మిక్కిలి చక్కగా ప్రదర్శించుటకు ఈ ప్రక్రియయం దుకాక ముండుటయే యిది యా ప్రాంతమున బహుళవ్యాప్తి సందుటకు కారణ మని యూహింపదగి యున్నది. ‘లీలాతిలక’ మను లక్షణ గ్రంథమునందు మళయాళమున రచితము లైన పెక్కు సందేశకావ్యములు పేర్కొనబడినవి. దీనివిబట్టి 14 వ శతాబ్దిలో రచింపబడిన ‘లీలాతిలకము’నకు పూర్వమే యిట్టి సందేశకావ్యములు మలయాళమున రచితము లగుచుండె నని యూహింపదగినది. వీనిలో ‘ఉజ్జునీలి సందేశము’ అను కావ్యము మిక్కిలి ప్రశస్తమయినది. ఇందులోనుండి యొక పద్యము లీలాతిలకమం దుదాహరింపబడుటచే ఇది 14 వ శతాబ్దికి పూర్వమే రచింపబడిన కావ్యమని చెప్పదగినది.

ఈ కావ్యమునుబట్టి యా కాలమునాటి కేరళదేశపు చారిత్రక సాంఘిక పరిస్థితులను కొంత వఱకు తెలిసికొనవచ్చును. శృంగారరస ప్రధానమయిన యీ కావ్యము నందలి వర్ణనలు స్వతంత్రములు.

‘Unnuneeli-samdesam is, by all standards, a first rate Kavya, not only among works of its kind but in all Manipravala Literature. Nothing much is known about its author, nor when he flourished. Judged in the light of internal evidence it is a 14th century composition in which the poet himself is the hero and the heroine a young girl related on the paternal side to the Vadakkumpur Royal family of Central Kerala..... and of extent specimens Unnuneeli-samdesam, the most important one deserves special consideration.’ —

It may be apter to describe it as Nritya - the contri-bution of acting, dancing and Music In Kathakali there is Nritya, there is music, there is literature and above all there are the nine Rasas known to Indian aesthetics'

'The untiring efforts of the Mahakavi and his institution have now won for 'Kathakali' an audience not only in Kerala or India, but even beyond the seas in Europe, in America and in the eastern countries..... Though it is not easy for non-malayalis to understand or enjoy its many charms fully it being rooted in the language and traditions of Kerala has that transcendent merit of all the noble art forms which defies the barriers of time and territory and makes a direct appeal to the aesthetic sense of a receptive audience..... It is thus a significant contribution which Kerala had made to the world of art through its Kathakali.

भारतीय काव्यशास्त्र की रूपरेखा

रचनात्मक साहित्य की भांति आलोचनात्मक या काव्यसिद्धान्त प्रतिपादक साहित्य की भी भारत की अपनी सुदीर्घ (सवा दो सहस्र वर्षों की) एवं स्वस्थ परम्परा है। पाश्चात्य साहित्यालोचन के प्रामाणिक आदिष्ठोत अरिस्टोटल हैं तो भारतीय काव्यशास्त्र के मूर्धन्य, सशक्त सूत्रधार आचार्य भरतमुनि हैं। संस्कृत भाषा में ही हमारे काव्यशास्त्रीय ग्रन्थों का प्रणयन प्रारम्भ हुआ था और सहस्रों वर्षों तक चलता भी रहा। विभिन्न भारतीय भाषाओं और विशेषतः हिन्दी भाषा में यह परम्परा आज भी जीवन संचरित कर रही है, यद्यपि इन सभी भाषाओं में मौलिक रचनाएं और सिद्धान्तस्थापनाएं प्रायः दुर्लभ हैं। संस्कृत काव्यशास्त्र के उद्भव और विकास की समीक्षा के पूर्व उसके स्वरूप, पृष्ठभूमि, विषय और सीमा को समझलेना अत्यन्त वाञ्छनीय है। इसके बिना पाठक के दिग्भ्रमिति हो जाने की अधिक संभावनाएं हैं।

काव्य और साहित्य शब्द सुदीर्घ काल से प्रायः समानार्थी रहे हैं। अतः इनके सिद्धान्त पक्ष पर विचार करनेवाले शास्त्र को काव्यशास्त्र तथा साहित्यशास्त्र की संज्ञा मिलती रही है। यह तथ्य भी ज्ञातव्य है कि संस्कृत-काव्यशास्त्र प्रायः अलंकार से निर्दिष्ट हुआ है अतः अनेक ग्रन्थों का नामकरण भी इसी आधार पर हुआ है - यथा - काव्यालंकार, काव्यादर्श, काव्यमीमांसा, अलंकारमूत्र

आदि । एतद् विषयक सभी ग्रन्थों को अलंकार ग्रन्थ ही समझा जाता रहा है ; यद्यपि इन ग्रन्थों में अलंकारों के अतिरिक्त काव्य के अनेक अन्य सिद्धान्तों पर भी विचार किया गया है । प्रमुखता अलंकार की रही है अतः नामकरण में भी उसका प्रामुख्य रहा । ज्यों ज्यों हमारा अध्ययन, मनन और विवेचन वैज्ञानिक तथा वैशिष्ट्य मूलक होता गया हमने नामकरण में भी वैज्ञानिक दृष्टि को स्वीकार किया । अतः काव्य के समस्त सिद्धान्त पक्ष एवं व्यवहार पक्ष पर शास्त्रीय दृष्टि से विचार करनेवाले तथा सिद्धान्तस्थापन करनेवाले शास्त्र को 'काव्यशास्त्र' की संज्ञा ही समीचीन स्वीकृत हुई । काव्यशास्त्र की परिभाषा विद्वानों, विश्वकोषों तथा कोषों के आधार पर दृष्टव्य है ।

“Poetics is a treatise on poetry as an art; a theory of poetry.”

[W. New International Dictionary]

अर्थात् काव्य की कलात्मकता का निबन्धन या काव्यसिद्धान्त ही काव्यशास्त्र है । आक्सफोर्ड डिक्शनरी के अनुसार —

“Poetics. the part of literary criticism which treats of poetry, also a treatise on poetry.”

अर्थात् काव्यशास्त्र, साहित्यिक आलोचना का वह भाग है जो काव्य पर विचार करता है, वह काव्य पर एक विधिवत् निबन्ध भी है ।

निष्कर्ष रूप में काव्य के सिद्धान्त और व्यवहार पक्षों का ध्यान रख कर हम कह सकते हैं कि काव्य शास्त्र वह विचार संस्था है जिस में काव्य के रूप, भेद, संरचना तथा समस्याओं पर वैज्ञानिक दृष्टि से विचार किया जाता है काव्य-व्यवस्था का नियामक एवं संपोषक शास्त्र काव्यशास्त्र है । स्वरूप, प्रवृत्ति और प्रभावकता पर काव्यशास्त्र के अन्तर्गत यापक विचार होता है । वस्तुतः काव्य यदि दृश्य है तो काव्यशास्त्र उसे सुस्पष्ट करनेवाली एक भव्यदृष्टि है ।

काव्यशास्त्र की पृष्ठभूमि या मूलाधार द्विविध है । एक ओर वह साहित्य-

कार में सृजन की उदात्तता एवं व्यवस्था को उद्घेलित करता है तो दूसरी ओर आस्वादयिता को भी विशिष्ट रुचि अर्थात् आस्वादन-क्षमता प्रदान करता है। इसका आशय यह है कि आस्वादक की रसग्रहण एवं कलानुमोदन की नीजरूप अव्यक्त सामर्थ्य को काव्यशास्त्र चिर अपेक्षित जलवायु प्रदान करता है। काव्य-शास्त्र की पृष्ठभूमि यदि सैद्धान्तिक या भावात्मक दृष्टि से हम जानना चाहें तो दो तथ्यों पर सहज ही हमारा ध्यान जाता है। प्रथम यह है कि हमारी समस्त चिन्तनधारा विषयमूलक है, रसमूलक है, घटनामूलक है; उसमें व्यक्ति की विचारणा, उसके विकसित चिन्तन और बदलते भावात्मक निजी आयामों को कोई अवसर नहीं। फलस्वरूप यह पद्धति हमें आदर्शवादी ही बनाती है और वैज्ञानिक होने से रोकती है। हमारा स्थायी तथ्यान्वेषण का आग्रह और तथ्य निरूपण की प्रकामता हमें सदा एक ही आदर्शवादी चिन्तन पद्धति में डालती है। यहाँ ध्यान देने की दूसरी बात यह है कि हम अपने प्रत्येक चिन्तन को या तथ्यान्वेषण को महत्ता और स्थायित्व प्रदान करने के लिए उसे एक प्राचीन दार्शनिक सत्य से बांधते हैं। अतः स्पष्ट है कि भारतीय काव्यशास्त्र के दो सुदृढ आधार हैं — (१) वस्तुमूलकता और (२) आदर्शवादिता। इन आधारों को हम एक अन्य दृष्टिकोण से कलात्मक एवं दार्शनिक भी कह सकते हैं। भारतीय अलंकार, रीति और वक्रोक्ति सम्प्रदाय मूलतः काव्य के बाह्य को ही काव्य का सर्वस्व मानते हैं अतः वे मूलतः कलात्मक हैं। दूसरी ओर आचार्यों ने जहाँ काव्य की आत्मा या वस्तुनिष्ठता पर ध्यान दिया है वहाँ सहज ही उनका आधार दार्शनिक हो गया है। ध्वनि और रस सम्प्रदाय अपनी वस्तुनिष्ठता के कारण दार्शनिकता से आबद्ध हैं। ध्वनि ब्रह्मनाद है और रस ब्रह्मानन्द सहोदर यह स्थापना सुविदित ही है। इससे ध्वनि और रस के मूल में दार्शनिकता सिद्ध होती है।

ललित रचनात्मक साहित्य के कला एवं भाव पक्ष की प्रकृति तथा प्रवृत्ति को स्पष्ट करना; आवश्यक सिद्धान्तों और नियमों का निर्धारण तथा विवेचन अथ च स्रष्टा और पाठक की सम्बन्ध स्थापना काव्यशास्त्र का विषय है। भाषा की विषयानुकूलता, सौष्ठव, शैलीगत अभिरामता, अलंकरण का औचित्य तथा भावों की उदात्तता आदि पर स्रष्टा और आस्वादयिता को एक वैज्ञानिक अथ च सहृदयता पूर्ण

सैद्धान्तिक व्यवस्था ही काव्यशास्त्र की परिधि है। सिद्धान्तकार अपने समय और परिस्थितियों की छाया में ही किसी व्यवस्था अथवा सिद्धान्त का प्रणयन करता है; फिर भी वह उस व्यवस्था में स्थायी मूल्यों का पूर्ण ध्यान रखता है। निष्कर्षतः काव्यशास्त्र का विषय काय के विभिन्न रूपों और उनके विविध अंग-प्रत्यंगों पर सैद्धान्तिक व्यवस्था देना है।

काव्यशास्त्र सामान्यतः काव्य से ही आबद्ध नहीं है। उसमें साहित्य के गद्य और पद्य की सभी विधाओं का समाहार होता है वह दृश्य और श्रव्य काव्य दोनों पर अधिकार पूर्वक सैद्धान्तिक व्यवस्था देता है। प्रायः काव्यशास्त्र को काव्य के सैद्धान्तिक पक्ष से ही नहीं बांधा जा सकता है, वह युगानुसार काव्य के व्यवहार पक्ष पर भी एक वैज्ञानिक व्यवस्था देता है। काव्यशास्त्र इससे भी आगे साहित्यकार और आस्वादयिता की भी विभिन्नस्तरीय कसौटियां निश्चित करता है। अतः इस शास्त्र का सीमाक्षेत्र सृजनात्मक साहित्य का सैद्धान्तिक और व्यावहारिक व्यवस्था देने के साथ स्रष्टा और पाठक को समृद्ध दृष्टि देने का महान् आयोजन करता है।

जहाँ तक काव्यशास्त्र के उद्देश्य का प्रश्न है एक ओर वह काव्य के विविधस्तरीय सौन्दर्य को सुस्पष्ट करके जनमानस को साधारणतर आनन्द से आप्लावित करता है, तो दूसरी ओर स्रष्टा को भी चिरनवीन, शालीन एवं धुरीण सृजन की अभूतपूर्व प्रेरणा देता है। रचयिता और आस्वादयिता के सम्बन्धों को स्वस्थ एवं गतिशील बनाने का ही इस शास्त्र का लक्ष्य है।

भारतीय (संस्कृत) काव्यशास्त्र की रूपरेखा पर दो पद्धतियों से विचार किया जा सकता है। प्रथम पद्धति में व्यक्तिगत रचनाओं पर इतिहास क्रम से विचार हो सकता है और दूसरी पद्धति में केवल सैद्धान्तिक विकास या इतिहास निरपेक्ष सिद्धान्त मूलक अध्ययन हो सकता है। प्रथम पद्धति हमारे लिए अकिंचित्कर होगी, क्योंकि एक ही युग में अनेक विचार धाराओं और सम्प्रदायों के आचार्यों की रचनाओं का सृजन हुआ है। अतः किसी एक ही विचार धारा का व्यवस्थित और पूर्ण अध्ययन इस विधि से संभव नहीं हो सकता। द्वितीय पद्धति के अन्तर्गत हम केवल विचार धारा और सिद्धान्त पर दृष्टि रख सकते हैं। यही पद्धति हमारे

उद्देश्य की सिद्धि में सहायक भी है। अतः हम संस्कृत काव्यशास्त्र के छह शास्त्रोप सम्प्रदायों पर क्रमशः विचार करेंगे। ये छह सम्प्रदाय ही इस धारा का सर्वस्व हैं। ये हैं — रस सम्प्रदाय, अलङ्कार सम्प्रदाय, रीति सम्प्रदाय, ध्वनि सम्प्रदाय, वक्रोक्ति सम्प्रदाय और औचित्य सम्प्रदाय।

युत्पत्ति और अर्थ —

रस शब्द 'रस' धातु से अच् तथा घ प्रत्यय करने पर निष्पन्न होता है। रस शब्द की व्याख्या दो प्रकार से की जा सकती है — १. रस्यते (आस्वाद्यते) इति रसः। अर्थात् जो आस्वादित किया जाय वह रस है। तथा — २. रसते (द्रवति) इति रसः। अर्थात् जो प्रवाहित हो वह रस है। ऊपर की गई व्युत्पत्ति से रस में विद्यमान दो तथ्य सम्मुख आते हैं। एक है उसका आस्वाद्यत्व और दूसरा है उसकी द्रवणशीलता। रस शब्द का काव्यानन्द के अर्थ में प्रयोग सर्वप्रथम भरतमुनि ने अपने नाट्यशास्त्र में किया। इस के पूर्व ऋग्वेद^१, उपनिषद्^२ आदि में अन्य अर्थों में इस शब्द का प्रयोग हुआ है।

इतना ही नहीं यह रस शब्द अपनी व्यापकता के कारण और भी अनेक अर्थों में प्रयुक्त हुआ है, यथा —

१. आयुर्वेदीय रस (रसायन)।
२. खाद्य पदार्थ रस - षड्रस (मधुर, कटु, आम्ल, क्षार, काषाय, तिक्त)।
३. भक्तिरस — अध्यात्म रस, ब्रह्मानन्द।
४. धातु - भस्म।

साहित्यिक आनन्द से इतर अर्थ देनेवाले ये सभी अर्थ निष्कर्षित सामूहिक

1. "दधानः कलशे रसम्" ऋग्वेद - ८-६३-१३ यह प्रयोग सोम रस के अर्थ में है।

2. "रसो वै सः रसं ह्येषायां लब्धवानन्दी भवति" तै० उपनिषद् [११-७-१] यह प्रयोग अध्यात्म परक अलौकिक आनन्द के अर्थ में है।

एवं अन्वितिमूलक परिणाम के कारण परोक्षतः साहित्यिक आनन्द की अन्तिम अवस्था (अन्विति मूलकता) का समर्थन करते हैं ।

रस की परिभाषा —

मूर्धन्य आचार्य भरत की परिभाषा है — “विभावानुभावव्यभिचारि संयोगाद्रस-निष्पत्तिः ।” अर्थात् विभाव, अनुभाव और व्यभिचारी (संचारी) भावों के योग से रस निष्पत्ति होती है । यद्यपि इस परिभाषा में स्थायिभाव का उल्लेख नहीं है परन्तु वह सहजगम्य है । आचार्य धनञ्जय ने अपने दशरूपक में परिभाषा में और भी स्पष्टता लाने का यत्न किया है —

विभावैरनुभावैश्च सात्त्विकैर्व्यभिचारिभिः ।

आनीयमानः स्वाद्यत्वं स्थायी भावो रसः स्मृतः ॥ ३।१।

अर्थात् विभाव, अनुभाव, सात्त्विक तथा व्यभिचारी भावों की सहायता से स्वाद्यत्वं को प्राप्त हुआ स्थायी भाव रस है । आचार्य मम्मट ने भी यही स्वर ध्वनित किया है — “व्यक्तः सतैः विभावाद्यैः स्थायी भावो रसः स्मृतः” किन्तु ममी आचार्य विश्वनाथ ने अपनी परिभाषा में आस्वादयिता के ‘सचेतसत्त्व’ का भी उल्लेख किया है ।

विभावेनानुभावेन व्यक्तः संचारिणा तथा ।

रसतामेति रत्यादिः स्थायिभावः सचेतसाम् ॥

आचार्य विश्वनाथ ने रस की अनेक विशेषताओं का उल्लेख किया है³ । यथा वह अखण्ड, स्वप्रकाशानन्द, चिन्मय, वेद्यान्तरस्पर्शशून्य, ब्रह्मास्वादसहोदर और लोकोत्तर चमत्कारप्राण है । उक्त विवेचन के आधार पर रस की चार प्रतिनिधि विशेषताएं सामने आती हैं —

3. सत्त्वोद्रेकादखण्डः, स्वप्रकाशानन्द चिन्मयः ।

वेद्यान्तरस्पर्शशून्यः, ब्रह्मास्वादसहोदरः ॥

लोकोत्तरचमत्कारप्राणः कैश्चित् प्रमातृभिः ।

स्वाकारवदभिन्नत्वेनायमास्वादयते रसः ॥३।२, ३।

१. रस का आस्वाद आनन्दमय है ।
२. रस ब्रह्मानन्द सहोदर है, अवक्तव्य है, एकच्छत्र है ।
३. रस के आनन्द का प्राण चमत्कार है ।
४. रस सचेतस संवेद्य है ।

अब हम रस पर भरतमुनि के अभिमत के साथ तथा अन्य रसवादी आचार्यों की मान्यताओं के आधार पर विचार करेंगे । भरत की रस सम्बन्धी परिभाषा तो सुविदित है ही । भरत ने रसों की संख्या आठ ही मानी है क्योंकि नाटक में इनका ही अभिनय संभव है । नवाँ रस शम को भरत ने उसकी अनभिनेयता के कारण स्वीकार नहीं किया । भरत की मुख्य दृष्टि नाटक पर थी अतः वे रस की अभिनेयता और अनुभूति को ही प्रामुख्य देते थे । नाटक की भांति काव्य भी भावात्मक प्रभाव देता है ; विचारो का तो उस में यत्किंचित् महत्त्व है । अतः नाटक की भांति काव्य भी रसानुभव कराता है । हमारे मानस की अतल गहराईयों में कुछ चिरसुप्त स्थायी भाव रहते हैं । उनके अनुकूल-बाह्य परिस्थितियां उन्हें जागृत एवं आन्दोलित अथवा उद्दीप्त करती हैं । इस भाव-जागृता व्यक्ति को आलम्बन और उद्दीपक बाह्य प्रकृति आदि को उद्दीपन कहा जाता है । ये आलम्बन और उद्दीपन सम्मिलित रूप से विभाव कहे जाते हैं । विभाव की अवस्था तक भाव की स्थिति आन्तरिक ही रहती है उसमें किसी प्रकार की आंगिक क्रिया नहीं होती । किन्तु इस स्थिति के विश्वमनीय और परिपक्व हो जाने पर आरम्भकर्ता आश्रय जब अपनी मनःस्थिति को अंगसंचालनादि द्वारा प्रकट करता है तब उसे अनुभाव कहा जाता है । यह अनुभाव आंगिक क्रिया के साथ अंगचेष्टा एवं तद्भाव सूचक विभिन्न चिन्हों से भा प्रकट होता है । इस अनुभाव का प्रत्युत्तर आलम्बन अपनी जिस आंगिक चेष्टा से देता है वह हाव कहा जाता है । अनुभाव के पश्चात् आलम्बन और आश्रय की अनुकूल मनस्थिति की निश्चायकता स्पष्ट हो जाती है । इसके पश्चात् दोनों ही पक्षों में अनेकक्षणस्थायी लवुभावोर्मियां उठती हैं जो उक्त मनःस्थिति को परिपुष्ट करती हैं । इन्हीं क्षणिक किन्तु पोषक लवुभावोर्मियों को संचारी भाव कहा जाता है । इस प्रकार इन सभी विभाव, अनुभाव और संचारी भावों की धारा में प्रवाहित, परवर्धित एवं

अन्ततः परिपक्व हुआ स्थायी भाव ही रसावस्था को प्राप्त करता है। रस वस्तुतः किसी क्रिया की विभिन्न अवस्थाओं में परिपक्व स्थिति का भावात्मक स्वाद है। एक पिण्डीभूत अथ च स्थिर एवं अधिकारी मनोभाव जब विभिन्न भावधाराओं में परिप्लावित होकर हमारे सम्पूर्ण शरीर और सम्पूर्ण चेतना को द्रवीभूत, तरलित तन्मय कर देता है तो यही ठोस के व्यापक द्रवीकरण की क्रिया रस कही जाती है।

आचार्य भरत की, रस-परिभाषा में विद्यमान 'संयोगात्' और 'निष्पत्ति' शब्द अपनी व्यापकता और गंभीरता के कारण सुदीर्घ काल से विद्वानों के विचार का विषय रहे हैं। विभिन्न आचार्यों की मौलिक स्थापनाएं अत्यन्त महत्वपूर्ण हैं। इसके अतिरिक्त उक्त परिभाषा में 'स्थायी भाव' का उल्लेख नहीं है यह भी विचारणीय है। क्या आचार्य भरत विभाव, अनुभाव और संचारीभाव के संयोग से उत्पन्न एक सर्वथा नये भाव को या एक सर्वथा नयी मनस्थिति को ही रस मानते हैं अथवा 'स्थायी भाव' भी उक्त परिभाषा में अन्तर्निहित है। भरत रस की वस्तु-निष्ठता पर ही अटूट विश्वास रखते हैं अतः निश्चित रूप से रस के मूल में वे स्थायी भाव को रखते हैं, यही भाव या आशय उक्त परिभाषा से ध्वनित होता है। रस की अनुभूति कैसी होती है, किसको होती है और कब होती है, इस विषय पर ही अनेक आचार्यों ने अपने अपने ढंग से विचार किया है। आचार्य भरत के पश्चात् रुद्रट सब से पहले व्यक्ति हैं जिन्होंने प्रेयस् और शान्त नामक दो रस अधिकमाने हैं और इस प्रकार रसों की संख्या दस कर दी है। इनकी दृष्टि मूलतः काव्य पर थी अतः उक्त दो रसों की योजना ये और कर सके। रसानुभूति के स्पष्टीकरण के सिद्धान्त पर इनके काव्यालंकार नामक ग्रन्थ में विचार नहीं किया गया है। भरतकृत रससूत्र के प्रतिनिधि व्याख्याता चार व्यक्ति हैं। महलोल्लट, शङ्कुक, भट्टनायक, अभिनवगुप्त। इन चारों आचार्यों के रसानुभूति प्रक्रिया पर दिये गये मत अधोलिखित हैं।

१. महलोल्लट	का	उत्पत्तिवाद
२. शङ्कुक	का	अनुमितिवाद
३. भट्टनायक	का	भुज्जिवाद
४. अभिनवगुप्त	का	अभिव्यक्तिवाद

उक्त प्रत्येक मत का संक्षिप्त आशय इस प्रकार है — भट्टलोल्लट के अनुसार विभाव और रस में कारण कार्य सम्बन्ध है। रति, शोक आदि स्थायी भाव नायिका आदि विभावों से जागृत एवं उद्दीप्त होकर, कटाक्ष, अंगप्रदर्शन, अश्रु आदि अनुभावों से व्यक्त होकर और संचारियों से तीव्र गत्या संचरित होकर अभिनेता में रसरूप हो जाते हैं। इस प्रकार रसस्थिति मूलतः रामादि मूल पात्रों में ही रहती है परन्तु नट में वह आरोपित होकर आ जाती है और दर्शकों को भी चमत्कृत करती है। भट्टलोल्लट की स्थापना में दो तथ्य महत्व के हैं —

१. विभाव और रस में कार्य कारण सम्बन्ध
२. अभिनेता में भी रस प्रतीति [मूल नायक के अतिरिक्त]।

समीक्षा —

लोल्लट ने विभाव और रस में जो कारण कार्य सम्बन्ध माना है वह असंगत है क्यों कि कारण कार्य सम्बन्ध में कारण [कुम्भकार] के नष्ट हो जाने पर कार्य [घट] विद्यमान रहता है, पर रस में तो कारण और कार्य साथ साथ ही रहते हैं। कारण के समाप्त होने पर कार्य भी समाप्त हो जाता है। लोल्लट की दूसरी स्थापना में यह आपत्ति उठती है कि अभिनेता में रसानुभूति कैसे होती है और दर्शक भी उसका आस्वादन कैसे करता है इसको उन्होंने स्पष्ट नहीं किया। भट्टलोल्लट ने रस के लौकिक विषयगत पक्ष को महत्ता दी है। उसके भावात्मक आस्वादन पर [जो कि दर्शक में ही संभव है] उनकी दृष्टि नहीं है। फिर अनुकार्य के निजी भावों का स्वाद अनुकर्ता को दूसरा भी आ सकता है। शृङ्गार के अवसर पर लज्जा और उत्साह के अवसर पर आलस्य या कायरता भी नट में आ सकती है। इसका समाधान लोल्लट न दे सके।

आचार्य शंकुक नैयायिक थे। भट्टलोल्लट के मत की स्वालितियों से वे परिचित थे अतः उन्होंने रसानुभूति के लिए अनुमितिवाद की स्थापना की। नट में अनुकार्य की समस्त क्रियाओं और रसाङ्गों के परिपाक को देखकर तथा उससे पर्याप्त प्रभावित होकर दर्शक अनुमान बल से रसास्वादन करते हैं। यहाँ रत्यादि भाव मूलतः नट में नहीं होते पर दर्शक अपने वासनावल [पूर्व संस्कारबल] से उन्हें

अनुमानित कर लेते हैं। यहाँ संयोग का अर्थ अनुमिति या गम्यगमक भाव है। इनका चित्रतुरङ्ग न्याय प्रसिद्ध है। शंकुक की मान्यता के अनुसार राम, दुष्यन्त आदि के भाव तथा संचारी भाव आदि अनुकर्ता के विभाव हैं और इनकी ही प्रतीति वह दर्शकों को अनुमिति के बल से कराता है। इस मत की स्थापना में त्रुटियाँ हैं। प्रथम त्रुटि यह है कि अनुमान ज्ञान का विषय है और रस मनोदशा का अतः दोनों की संगति संभव नहीं है। फिर अनुमान मिथ्या भी होता है अतः मिथ्या के आधार पर सत्य की प्रतीति नहीं हो सकती। दूसरी आपत्ति यह है कि अनुमान अप्रत्यक्ष होता है अतः उसको पहुँच रस दशा तक कैसे हो सकता है। बाबू गुलाबराय के अनुसार “विचार या भाव सीधे प्रत्यक्ष अनुभव के आधार पर व्यञ्जना द्वारा भावना के विषय बनते हैं। सामाजिकों की वासना तो अनुभव को रंग देगी किन्तु अनुमान अनुमान ही रहेगा।” इसके अतिरिक्त इस मत में इस महत्वपूर्ण बात पर भी विचार नहीं किया गया है कि मूल (रामादि) पात्रों के रति एवं शोकादि भाव सामाजिकों के कैसे हो सकते हैं। इन दोनों ही आचार्यों ने रस की सत्ता प्रेक्षक में नहीं मानी है।

भट्टनायक ने रस की स्थिति को प्रेक्षक के हृदय में स्वीकार किया। मूल भाव, जो आलम्बन के प्रति नायक का है वही प्रेक्षक का हो यह कहना संभव, नहीं क्योंकि राम का सीता के प्रति जो भाव है वही प्रेक्षक का कैसे हो सकता है? पर भाव साधारणी कृत हो जाने पर प्रेक्षक स्वयं के स्थायी भावों का ही स्वाद लेता है। आनन्द या आस्वादन तो सामान्यीकृत स्थायी का होता है उसमें किसी का वैशिष्ट्य नहीं रह जाता। भट्टनायक ने रसानुभूति के लिए तीन शक्तियाँ मानी हैं — (१) अभिधा, (२) भावकत्व, (३) भोजकत्व। प्रथम अभिधा शक्ति के द्वारा पाठक या दर्शक के मन में शब्दार्थ के माध्यम से घटना की बाह्य कले पर मूलक स्थूल प्रतीति होती है। द्वितीय (भावकत्व) की अवस्था में प्रथम प्रतीति का स्थूल ढाँचा भावात्मक एवं विस्तृत हो जाता है। वह दर्शक की भावस्थिति को तैय्यार कर देता है। और तृतीय (भोजकत्व) अवस्था में तो व्यक्ति सांसारिक समस्त बन्धनों से सर्वथा मुक्त होकर उक्त भावस्थिति का भोग ही करने लगता है; यही रसानुभूति है। भट्टनायक की उक्त स्थापना का आशय यह है

कि प्रथम अवस्था में, प्रदर्शित भाव का स्थूल चित्र या रूपरेखा ही प्रस्तुत होती है। अर्थात् प्रदर्शित भाव, या पात्र से दर्शक का एक सामान्य परिचय ही प्रथम अवस्था में होता है। द्वितीय अवस्था में नट, मूलपात्र द्वारा प्रदर्शित भावधारा या स्थायी भाव से दर्शक की निकटता स्थापित होती है। इस नैकट्य में स्थूल वैयक्तिक वैशिष्ट्य धरेधोरे समाप्त हो जाता है और तृतीय अवस्था में तो व्यक्ति-विशेष की सत्ता सर्वथा समाप्त हो जाती है और व्यक्ति भाव का द्रवीभूत सामान्य अवस्था का ही भोग करता है। तृतीय अवस्था में दर्शक का समस्त अन्य सांसारिक सम्बन्ध विलीन हो जाता है और उसके समस्त मन-प्राण प्रदर्शित स्थायी भाव के साधारणीकृत आस्वादन में डूब जाते हैं। यह ध्यान रखने का बात है कि भट्टनायक ने संयोग का अर्थ भोज्यभाव और निष्पत्ति का अर्थ भुक्ति माना है। यह धारणा सांख्यमतानुकूल हैं। इस मत के सम्बन्ध में अभिनवगुप्त ने आपत्ति उठाई है कि भावकत्व और भोजकत्व नामक दो शक्तियों की स्वतन्त्र कल्पना अनावश्यक है। शास्त्रीय दृष्टि से भी ये अनावश्यक हैं। रसव्यञ्जना और रसास्वाद में उक्त दोनों क्रियाएं आ ही जाती हैं। भट्टनायक की भांति अभिनव गुप्त भी साधारणीकरण के समर्थक हैं।

अभिनवगुप्त -

आचार्य अभिनवगुप्त का रसानुभूतिविषयक सिद्धान्त अभिव्यक्तिवाद के नाम से प्रसिद्ध है। आपके सिद्धान्त स्थापना में वासनातत्त्व और साधारणीकरण का विशेष महत्त्व है। मनोवैज्ञानिक स्तर पर भी आपने सर्वप्रथम ध्यान दिया है। आचार्य अभिनव के अनुसार दर्शकों के हृदयस्थ मनो विकार जो वासना के रूप में सदैव रहते हैं विभाव अनुभाव और संचारी भावों से जागृत, उद्दीप्त एवं क्रिया-शील अथ च साधारणीकृत होकर, वे ही रसास्वाद की अवस्था को प्राप्त करते हैं। स्पष्ट है कि वासना या संस्कार रूप में अव्यक्त रूप से समाजिकों का स्थायी भाव ही विविध रसों से पुष्ट होकर सहृदयों के लोकोत्तर आनन्द का कारण बनता है। अनुकूल सहायक कारणों को प्राप्त कर सामाजिक का स्थायी भाव ही रसरूप में अभिव्यक्त हो उठता है।

इस प्रकार आचार्य अभिनवगुप्त ने रसानुभूति के सम्बन्ध में अत्यन्त

तर्कसम्मत, मनोविज्ञानमूलक एवं ठोस व्याख्या दी। इस व्याख्या के आधार पर, नाटक के साथ काव्यादि में भी रसास्वाद एवं रसस्थिति की संभावना के द्वार खुले।

परवर्ती व्याख्याता एवं विचारक आचार्यों ने प्रायः अभिनव गुप्त की मान्यता को ही स्वीकार किया है। आचार्य धनञ्जय का मत दृष्टव्य है —

विभावैरनुभावैश्च सात्विकैर्व्यभिचारिभिः ।

आनीयमानः स्वाद्यत्त्वं स्थायी भावो रसः स्मृतः ॥४१॥

भानुदत्त और विश्वनाथ भी रससिद्धान्त के प्रमुख व्याख्याता हैं। विश्वनाथ ने तो स्पष्टतया रस को ही काव्य की आत्मा स्वीकार किया है। आचार्य विश्वनाथ ने कोई नवीन स्थापना नहीं की। आचार्य मम्मट और जगन्नाथ ने भी रस के व्यापक महत्त्व को स्वीकार किया है। रसध्वनि को उत्तम काव्य का प्राण माना है।

इसके अतिरिक्त रस का एक सर्वथा नया रूप हमें रूप गोस्वामी की प्रसिद्ध रचना 'उज्ज्वल नीलमणि' में मिलता है। इस ग्रन्थ में वैष्णव भक्ति सिद्धान्तों के आधार पर रस की भक्तिमूलक व्याख्या की गई है। इस ग्रन्थ में भक्ति को एक स्वतन्त्र रस माना गया है। इस रस के शान्त, दास्य, सख्य, वात्सल्य और माधुर्य नामक पांच प्रकार माने गये हैं। ये सभी भाव कृष्ण के प्रति ही होते हैं।

सम्प्रदाय —

सादृश्य, बिम्बविधान और कल्पना का काव्य में प्रामुख्य आज निर्विवाद है। अलंकार के ही ये पोषक तत्त्व हैं। अलंकरण एक ओर यदि बाह्य सौन्दर्य ही है तो अन्तः सौन्दर्य से भी उसका नाता कम नहीं है। अपनी मर्मस्पर्शिनी अनुभूतियों के रूप में ही अलंकार का जन्म छिपा है। अतः काव्योद्भव के साथ ही अलंकार की सत्ता भी चिरकालीन है।

ऐतिहासिक दृष्टि से यह सम्प्रदाय भी अतिप्राचीन है। आचार्य भरत ने अपने नाट्यशास्त्र में मूलभूत चार नाटकाश्रयी अलंकारों की चर्चा की है। —

उपमा रूपकं चैव, दीपकं यमकं तथा ।

अलङ्कारास्तु विज्ञेयाश्चत्वारो नाटकाश्रयाः ॥

१-१७-४३.

ये उपमा, दीपक, रूपक तथा यमक अलंकार रसाश्रित बताये गये हैं। यद्यपि भरत की मूलदृष्टि रस पर थी वे अलंकारवादी न थे। वस्तुतः सम्प्रदाय के अन्तर्गत वे ही व्यक्ति (आचार्य) आते हैं जिन्होंने अलंकार को ही काव्य का सर्वस्व माना है। सामान्यतया सभी आचार्यों ने अलंकारों का विवेचन किया है।

आचार्य भामह इस सम्प्रदाय के संस्थापक हैं। अपने 'काव्यालंकार' में आपने प्रमुख रूपेण अलंकारों की महत्ता पर बल दिया है। भामह के अनुसार वक्रोक्ति में ही काव्य का सौन्दर्य है। वक्रोक्ति से भामह का आशय है बिम्बोत्पादनक्षम प्रभावक कथन पद्धति। भामह ने ३८ अलंकार माने हैं और उन में वक्रोक्ति को सर्वाधिक प्राधान्य दिया है — 'को अलंकारोऽनयाविना'। अलंकार के सम्बन्ध में आचार्य भामह की प्रसिद्ध उक्ति है —

‘न कान्तमपि निर्भूषं विभाति वनिताननम्’

वस्तुतः सौन्दर्य वस्तु में तो नाममात्र को ही होता है। वह पूर्णतया व्यञ्जना पर निर्भर करता है। कोई वस्तु या व्यक्ति स्वयं कितना ही सुन्दर क्यों न हो पर जबतक उसकी सशक्त एवं प्रभावक व्यञ्जना नहीं होती तब तक वह मानस को अह्लादित नहीं कर पाता। भामह ने स्पष्टतया अलंकारों का प्राण वक्रोक्ति माना है और अलंकार को काव्य का प्राण माना है। अतः वे वक्ररीत्या वक्रोक्ति का ही समर्थन करते हैं। वे वक्रोक्तिवादी नहीं हैं। भामह ने अलंकार शब्द का प्रयोग ही 'काव्य-सौन्दर्य' के लिए बड़े मौलिकता के साथ किया है।

भामह के पश्चात् दूसरे प्रसिद्ध अलंकारवादी आचार्य दण्डी है। दण्डी ने अपने काव्यादर्श में अलंकारों को विशेष महत्त्व प्रदान किया है। दण्डी ने काव्य में गुणों की महत्ता पर भी पर्याप्त बल दिया है — “काव्यशोभाकरान् धर्मानलङ्कारान् प्रचक्षते” [काव्यादर्श २-१]। दण्डी ने काव्य में गुणों और रीति के लिए भी पर्याप्त महत्त्व स्थापित किया। दण्डी ने केवल ३५ अलंकारों को मन्यता दी और भामह के तीन अलंकार त्याग दिये। वक्रोक्ति के स्थान पर दण्डी ने 'अतिशय' को ही काव्य की आत्मा माना। वस्तुतः वक्रोक्ति और अतिशय में कोई भेद नहीं है।

इसके पश्चात् आचार्य उद्धट [= वीं शती] ने अलंकारों की संख्या ४१ कर दी। इनका ग्रन्थ 'काव्यालङ्कारसारसंग्रह' पर्याप्त प्रसिद्ध है। इस ग्रन्थ के वैशिष्ट्य के प्रतिपादनार्थ प्रतिहारेन्दुराज ने एक अत्यन्त महत्त्व पूर्ण टीका भी लिखी थी।

इसके पश्चात् रुद्रट (९ वीं शती) भी ख्यातनामा अलंकार वादी हुए हैं। 'काव्यालङ्कार' नाम का आपका भी ग्रन्थ है। इस और अलंकार दोनों को रुद्रट ने काव्य में महत्ता प्रदान की है। रुद्रट ने अलंकारों के बैज्ञानिक वर्गीकरण का सर्वप्रथम नूतन प्रयास किया। रुद्रट ने वात्सल्य या प्रेयस् नामक दसवां रस भी माना है।

रुद्रट के पश्चात् अलंकारों पर कोई नया विचार या सिद्धान्तस्थापना नहीं हुई। परवर्ती आचार्य भोज, राजशेखर, रुय्यक, हेमचन्द्र, जयदेव, वाग्भट तथा अप्पय दीक्षित आदि आचार्यों ने अपनी अपनी कृतियों में अलंकार संख्यावृद्धि, परिभाषा की काँट छांट (अनावश्यक) और बेतु के वर्गीकरण ही किये। इन सभी में कहीं कहीं अवश्य ही मौलिक प्रयास हुआ है। अन्ततः अलंकारों की संख्या १२० तक हो गई। यहाँ सब से अधिक ध्यान देने की बात यह है कि उक्त परवर्ती सभी आचार्यों ने अलंकारों की काव्य में महत्ता, प्रभाव और आवश्यकता पर रंचमात्र भी दृष्टि नहीं रखी। वर्णन, वर्गीकरण और विवरण के सत ही स्तरों पर ही इन आचार्यों की प्रतिभा उलझी रही।

भामह ने जिस स्वस्थ एवं ठोस धरातल पर अलंकार को स्थिर किया था; उसमें रस रीति, गुण और वक्रोक्ति का जो मधुर समावेश किया था, यदि आगे भी वही विकास क्रम चलता रहता तो आज भी अलंकार का ही काव्य पर आधिपत्य होता। समय के साथ गुण और रीति अपने अपने ढंग से अलंकार से पृथक् हो गये और एक स्वतन्त्र सम्प्रदाय भी बन गये। रस और वक्रोक्ति का भी यही हुआ। मात्र अलंकार का एक भेद न रहकर वक्रोक्ति का स्वयं एक विराट् सम्प्रदाय ही बन गया। इतनी ही नहीं 'वक्रोक्तिः काव्य जीवितम्' भी घोषित हुआ। इसी प्रकार एक नवीन सम्प्रदाय 'ध्वनि सम्प्रदाय' भी आया जिसने रसस्थिति को और भी पुष्ट किया। आज स्थिति ठीक उल्टी हो गई है।

अलंकार स्वयं रीति, वक्रोक्ति और रस का अंगमात्र सा रह गया है। युग के बदलने-मान दण्डों की वश्यता कौन अस्वीकार कर सकता है।

रीति सम्प्रदाय --

रीति सम्प्रदाय के प्रतिष्ठापक आचार्य वामन थे। रीति का विवेचन यद्यपि आचार्य भरत से ही होता आ रहा था; उसे काव्य में प्रतिनिधि एवं प्राणतत्त्व के रूप में प्रतिष्ठित करने का श्रेय आचार्य वामन को ही है। भरत ने रीति को काव्यगुण के रूप में, भामह ने वैदर्भी और गौडी इन दो काव्य प्रणालियों के रूप में तथा दण्डी ने रीति को गुणात्मिका या गुणनिष्ठ माना। दण्डी गुणवादी थे अतः उन्होंने दश गुणों को वैदर्भी रीति का प्राण माना। —

‘इति वैदर्भनार्गस्य प्राणा दश गुणाः स्मृताः’ [काव्यादर्श १।४२]

रीति और वक्रोक्ति के प्रखर बीज भामह में विद्यमान थे। आचार्य प्रवर वामन [चर्ची शक्ति] ने रीति में गाम्भीर्य और व्यापकता की अभूतपूर्व परख की और उसे काव्य की आत्मा “रीतिरात्मा काव्यस्य” [काव्यालङ्कार १, २, ६] पोषित किया। वामन ने मौलिक दृष्टि से रीति पर चिन्तन किया। विवेचन, वर्गीकरण एवं सिद्धान्त स्थापन में उनकी मौलिकता देखी जा सकती है। रीति विशिष्ट कोटि की पद संरचना है। इस में अनेक गुण विद्यमान रहते हैं। इस पदसंरचना पर ही काव्य की महत्ता निर्भर करती है। वामन ने वैदर्भी और गौडी के साथ पाञ्चाली रीति को भी स्वीकार किया। गौणी रीति को महत्ता प्रदान की। उसे आज गुण प्रधान बताकर उसके प्रति समाज में एक धारणा का नूतन बीजारोपण किया। वैदर्भी को तो वामन ने सर्वगुण सम्पन्न माना ही है। पाञ्चाली रीति में माधुर्य और सौकुमार्य गुणों को आचार्य वामन ने माना है। वामन ने दण्डी की भांति दश गुणों का अर्थ और शब्दगत न मानकर अर्थ और शब्द के स्वतन्त्रदश दश गुण माने हैं।

ऐसा प्रतीत होता है शैली के अनेक प्रकारों को ही रीति विश्वासी आचार्यों ने नये नाम दिये हैं। रीति को सम्प्रदाय का स्वतन्त्र महत्त्व देने के लिए सम्भवतः ऐसा किया गया। तो दूसरी ओर रीति और गुण का भी चक्र चल ही रहा था। गुण और रीति का पारस्परिक सम्बन्ध निश्चित होना था। वामन ने

ये दोनों समस्याएं उचित ढंग से सुलझाईं। शैली एक शास्त्रीय आधार पर प्रचलित अभिव्यक्ति पद्धति है पर उसमें वैयक्तिकता भी पर्याप्त रहती है। रीति एक निश्चित व्यवस्था है — भाषा और गुण दोनों के लिए। इसी प्रकार गुण रीति के बिना अप्रकट हैं और रीति गुणों के अभाव में खोखली। अतः दोनों एक दूसरे के पूरक हैं। वामन का असली मन्तव्य तो यह है कि गुण रीति के ही अंग हैं — उसके अन्तर्गत हैं। गुण और दोषों का सद्भाव एवं अभाव रीति के अन्तर्गत ही स्वीकृत हुआ। प्रारम्भ में गुण की स्वतन्त्र सत्ता ही न थी। दोषाभाव को ही गुण समझ लिया जाता था। अर्थात् दोषों की सत्ता भावनात्मक थी और गुण की निषेधात्मक या अभावात्मक। बाद में गुण को भी भावात्मकता प्रदान की गई और उनका भी स्वतन्त्र स्थान निर्धारित किया गया। आशय यह है कि गुण और दोष रीति सम्प्रदाय के अंग थे और दीर्घकाल तक रहे। अलंकार भी रीति का अंग मान लिया गया। अर्थात् रीति ऐसी पद-संरचना मानी गई जिसमें गुण हों, दोष न हों और अलंकार भी हों। परन्तु, जैसा कि आज सुविदित है कि धारे धीरे दोष, गुण और अलंकारों का अपना स्वतन्त्र ही स्थान बन गया; वे किसी के (सम्प्रदाय के) अंगमात्र न रहे। कुछ और समय व्यतीत होने पर तो रीति को काव्य का केवल बाह्यांग ही माना जाने लगा। काव्यात्मा से उसका कोई सम्बन्ध नहीं है यह मान्यता ही स्थिर हो गई। रस और ध्वनि सम्प्रदायों का आविर्भाव हुआ।

जहां तक इस सम्प्रदाय के विकास की बात है परवर्ती सभी आचार्यों ने रीति का महत्त्व स्वीकार किया है, भले ही यह महत्त्व अल्प ही माना हो। रुद्रट ने लाटी नामक चौथी रीति का आविष्कार किया। आनन्दवर्धन ने रस परिपाक में रीतिगत पदसंरचना का महत्त्व स्वीकार किया। कुन्तक ने रीति का प्रायः विरोध ही किया। वे रीति का विभाजन देशीय आधार पर न चाहते थे। अभिव्यक्ति देशविशेष से परिवद्ध नहीं हो सकती। भोज ने मागधी और अवन्तिका नामक दो रीतियां और प्रचलित कीं परन्तु वे चल न सकीं। मम्मट तथा विश्वनाथ आदि काव्यशास्त्राचार्यों ने भी रीति को काव्य के बहिर्गंग तत्त्व के रूप में ही स्वीकार किया है। ये आचार्य काव्य का लक्ष्य भावों और रसों की व्यंजना ही मानते थे। इस व्यंजना में रीति या शैली सहयोग दे सकते हैं, देते हैं, परन्तु इसीलिए वे स्वयं काव्यात्मा नहीं बन सकती।

आचार्य कुन्तक [१० वीं शती उत्तरार्ध] वक्रोक्ति सम्प्रदाय के प्रवर्तक थे। पूर्ववर्ती आचार्यों [भामह, वामन, दण्डी आदि] ने भी वक्रोक्ति पर पर्याप्त विचार किया है। भामह ने तो समस्त अलंकारों के मूल में वक्रोक्ति को माना है। इतना होने पर भी वक्रोक्ति को अलंकार के एक अङ्ग से अधिक महत्त्व नहीं मिला। कुन्तक ने सर्वप्रथम वक्रोक्ति की बहुमुखी क्षमता पर विचार कर उसे काव्यात्मा के पद पर प्रतिष्ठित किया। वक्रोक्ति को कुन्तक ने 'वैदग्ध्यभङ्गाभणिति' रिति कहा है। स्पष्ट है कुन्तक वक्रोक्ति में बुद्धिगत चातुर्य और चमत्कार पूर्ण कथन को ही प्रामुख्य देते हैं। वक्रोक्ति में वस्तु अथवा विषय गौण होता है। कथनकर्ता और श्रोता का मानस सम्बन्ध मुख्य होता है। वक्रोक्तिकार श्रोता के मन, ग्रहणशक्ति और स्थल आदि का ध्यान रखकर अत्यन्त चुस्त एवं प्रभावक ढंग से बात कहता है; फलतः बात तीर की भांति असरकर जाती है। स्पष्ट है कि क्या कहा गया की अपेक्षा कैसे कहा गया अधिक महत्त्वपूर्ण है। अभिव्यक्ति का कौशल ही काव्य का सर्वत्र है। अभिव्यक्ति यदि सशक्त हो तो श्रोता के मन में उल्लास आता ही है और हृदय भी अनेक रूपच्छवियों से भर उठता है। हृदय की अनुभूति भी यथासंभव अभिव्यक्ति से होती है। यह मानी हुई बात है कि अनुभूति को जागृत एवं क्रियाशील करना रस का कार्य है; ठीक इसी प्रकार मनोरंजन [मन को चमत्कृत] करना वक्रोक्ति का काम है। परन्तु, वक्रोक्तिकार कुन्तक के अनुसार वक्रोक्ति के द्वारा ही प्रत्येकस्तर के स्वार की स्थिति उत्पन्न की जा सकती है। कुन्तक ने ध्वनि और रस को भी वक्रोक्ति के अन्तर्गत स्वीकार किया। रोचक अभिव्यञ्जना परिपक्व, शिल्पी कविहृदय से ही संभव है। गंभीर अनुभूति तो अनेक व्यक्ति कर सकते हैं पर वया ये सभी व्यक्ति उसे सशक्त, प्रभावक एवं छविमयी अभिव्यक्ति भी दे सकते हैं? कुन्तक काव्य में अर्थगत रमणीयता को भी स्वीकार करते हैं। उनकी वक्रोक्ति की परिभाषा में विद्यमान विदग्धता शब्द अर्थगत रमणीयता का भी संमूचक है। कुन्तक ने वक्रोक्ति के छः भेद किये हैं :- वर्णवक्रता [पूर्वपद, उत्तरपद], पदवक्रता, वाक्यवक्रता, प्रबन्धवक्रता और प्रकरण वक्रता। रस और अलंकारगत वक्रता भी इसमें ही सम्मिलित है। इन वक्रता भेदों पर विचार करने से कुछ तथ्य सामने आते हैं - यथा वर्ण और पदगत वक्रता के द्वारा कुन्तक शब्दयोजना

और शब्दालंकार की ओर संकेत करते हैं। वाक्यगत वक्रता के द्वारा अर्थालंकार संकेतित हैं। प्रकरण और प्रबन्धगत वक्रता रसदृष्टि से एवं चमत्कार संयोजन के निमित्त है।

यह सम्प्रदाय कुन्तक से प्रारम्भ होकर उनके साथ ही समाप्त हो गया। वक्रोक्ति को अलंकारों में पर्याप्त महत्त्व मिल चुका था अतः इसे एक पिष्टपेषण ही समझा गया। कुछ भी हो, कुन्तक की परम्परा में भले हों ग्रन्थ न लिखे गये हों; पर इसे अस्वीकार नहीं किया जा सकता कि कुन्तक ने ही सर्वप्रथम काव्य उक्तिवैचित्र्य या कल्पना तत्त्व की पूर्ण प्रतिष्ठा की। कविदृष्टि को, उसके अभिव्यक्ति कौशल को चिर प्रतीक्षित सम्मान दिया। पश्चिम में क्रोचे जिस अभिव्यञ्जनवाद का जनक होकर अमर हो गया, उसके गहरे बीज आचार्य कुन्तक ने सैकड़ों वर्ष पहले ही भारतीय परम्परा को प्रदान कर दिये थे।

ध्वनि सम्प्रदाय -

सामान्यतया कानों से सुना जानेवाला नाद ही ध्वनि कहा जाता है। काव्य और दर्शन शास्त्र में ध्वनि एक निश्चित पारिभाषिक अर्थ में प्रयुक्त होनेवाला शब्द है। काव्य शास्त्र में तो इसकी महत्ता अनेक रूपों में प्रकट की गई है। यथा -

१. वह व्यंजक शब्द जो ध्वनित करे या कराये।
२. वह व्यंजक अर्थ जो ध्वनित करे या कराये।
३. वह [वस्तु, रस, अलंकार] जिसकी व्यंजना करायी जाए।
४. वह शब्दशक्ति जिसके द्वारा व्यंजना कराई जाय।
५. वह काव्य जिसमें रस, वस्तु और अलंकारों का ध्वनन होता है।

स्पष्ट है कि ध्वनि शब्द - व्यंजक शब्द, व्यंजक अर्थ, व्यंजनाक्रिया तथा व्यंग्यकाव्य के लिए प्रयुक्त हुआ है। काव्य में शब्द और अर्थ तो शरीरमात्र हैं, उनसे व्यंजित होनेवाला तात्पर्य ही मुख्य है। ध्वनिवादियों के अनुसार काव्य में शाब्दिक रूप से जो कुछ कहा जाता है वह काव्य का लक्ष्य नहीं है; अपितु काव्य

का ध्वन्यार्थ ही काव्य का मुख्य प्रयोजन है। उत्कृष्ट काव्य का लक्ष्य स्थूल शब्दार्थ ज्ञान कराना नहीं है। भावों, संवेगों और रसों की व्यंजना ही उसका लक्ष्य है।

ध्वनि को सम्प्रदाय के रूप में प्रतिष्ठित करने का सर्वप्रथम श्रेय ध्वन्यालोक-कार आचार्य आनन्दवर्धन को है। ध्वनि सिद्धान्त इसके पूर्व था अवश्य, परन्तु सिद्धान्त और सम्प्रदाय के रूप में, काव्यात्मा के रूप में उसकी प्रथम प्रतिष्ठा आनन्दवर्धन ने ही की। इस सिद्धान्त के अनुसार काव्य के, ध्वनिकाव्य, गुणीभूत व्यंग्य और चित्रकाव्य ये तीन भेद किये गये। ध्वनि की महत्ता को दृष्टि में रखकर ही ये भेद किये गये हैं। जिस उक्ति में व्यंग्यार्थ का ही प्रामुख्य रहता है अर्थात् जिसमें वाच्यार्थ अत्यन्त गौण होता है और व्यंग्यार्थ ही मुख्य एवं चमत्कारी होता है, वह ध्वनिकाव्य कहलाता है।

ध्वनि के मुख्य दो भेद हैं — (१) संलक्ष्य क्रमध्वनि, (२) असंलक्ष्य क्रम ध्वनि। जहाँ वाच्यार्थ के माध्यम से व्यंग्यार्थ ग्रहण किया जाता है वहाँ संलक्ष्यक्रम ध्वनि होती है। यह ध्वनि वस्तुव्यंजना का प्राण है। असंलक्ष्यक्रम ध्वनि वहाँ होती है जहाँ वाच्यार्थ के बिना, शब्द सुनते ही सीधा व्यंग्यार्थ स्पष्ट हो जाय। इसी ध्वनि के द्वारा भावव्यंजना और रसव्यंजना होती है। ध्वनि के और भी अनेक भेद प्रभेद किये गये हैं, पर उक्त दो ही प्रमुख आधार हैं।

इस सिद्धान्त का प्रतिनिधि ग्रन्थ 'ध्वन्यालोक' दो लक्ष्यों की पूर्ति करता है। पहला है ध्वनि सिद्धान्त का संस्थापन और अलंकार, रस, रीति, वक्रोक्ति आदि का उसमें समाहार। दूसरा है काव्य में वस्तु और विषय की अपेक्षा अभिप्राय, संवेग और भावों का व्यंग्यदृष्टि से महत्त्व प्रतिपादन। आचार्य मम्मट और विश्वनाथ ने भी इस सम्प्रदाय का समर्थन किया। ध्वनि सिद्धान्त की प्रतिष्ठा के लिए मम्मट की देन महनीय है। कुन्तक ने ध्वनि को वक्रोक्ति में ही लीन कर दिया और उसकी स्वतन्त्र सत्ता ही न रहने दी। महिम भट्ट ने व्यञ्जना की उद्भावना को ही तर्क संमत न माना। अभिधा और लक्षणा को ही वे शब्द शक्ति मानते थे। भट्टतौत केवल अभिधा शक्ति ही मानते थे। मम्मट ने इस सबका खण्डन कर ध्वनि को पुनः प्रतिष्ठित किया। ध्वनि के भेदों की संख्या १०४४५ तक जा चुकी थी। आचार्य अभिनव गुप्त ने तो इस सम्प्रदाय को

विकास की पराकाष्ठा पर ही पहुंचा दिया। उनका रस और ध्वनि विषयक अभिव्यंजना वाद सुविदित ही है। अभिनव गुप्त ने रस और ध्वनि को अन्योन्या-श्रयी भी सिद्ध किया। ध्वनि के मूल में रस न हो तो वह खोखली एवं निर्जीव होगी। ठीक इसी प्रकार रस यदि व्यंग्य न हो तो उसमें चमत्कार एवं लोकोत्तरत्त्व न आ सकेगा।

पंडितराज जगन्नाथ ने भी ध्वनि की महत्ता प्रतिपादित की है। काव्य के चार भेदों — [उत्तमोत्तम, उत्तम, मध्यम, अधम] में उत्तमोत्तम अर्थात् ध्वनि काव्य को ही उन्होंने श्रेष्ठतम माना है। काव्य की परिभाषा में भी पं. राज ने ध्वनि की महत्ता प्रतिपादित की है -- 'रमणीयार्थप्रतिपादकः शब्दः काव्यम्'। इस परिभाषा में 'रमणीयार्थ' और 'शब्दः' काव्य की ध्वनिमूलकता की ओर ही संकेत करते हैं।

औचित्य सम्प्रदाय -

चर्चित पांच सम्प्रदायों के कारण काव्य की वास्तविक आत्मा क्या है यह बात और भी अधिक उलझती जाती थी। प्रत्येक सम्प्रदाय के अपने पुष्ट तर्क थे ही अतः पाठक का किसी सहो निर्णय पहुंचना प्रायः कठिन हो गया था। ऐसी स्थिति में आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र ने अत्यन्त सन्तुलित एवं वैज्ञानिक दृष्टि के साथ एक रचनात्मक कदम उठाया और प्रत्येक मत का काव्य में औचित्य सिद्ध किया। सुविधा की दृष्टि से उक्त पांचों सम्प्रदायों को काव्य के शरीर और आत्मा के आधार पर दो भागों में बांटा जा सकता है। अलंकार, रीति, वक्रोक्ति शरीरवादी हैं; रस और ध्वनि आत्मवादी हैं। शरीर के अभाव में आत्मा का अस्तित्व सिद्ध करना कठिन है और आत्मा के बिना शरीर का महत्त्व ही क्या है? अतः शरीर और आत्मा के समुचित सन्तुलन पर ही काव्य में पूर्णत्व आ सकता है। आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र को एक स्रष्टा की ठोस निर्मायक दृष्टि प्राप्त थी। अतः वे इस प्रकार का व्यापक एवं चिर अपेक्षित औचित्य सम्प्रदाय स्थापित कर सके। क्षेमेन्द्र की मौलिकता इस बात में ही है कि वे काव्यशास्त्र के खिखरते घटक सम्प्रदायों को एकसूत्र कर उनका सही मूल्यांकन कर सके और भविष्यत् के लिए भी काव्य के प्रति एक व्यापक एवं सुलक्षी हुई चेतना दे सके। काव्य में, विशेषतः प्रबन्ध में नीति, आदर्श, यथार्थ और कल्पना की एक मर्यादा आवश्यक है और दूसरी ओर कला-सौष्ठव की भी सीमाएं हैं। इनका ध्यान न रखने पर सामाजिक प्रभाव कभी स्वस्थ

नहीं हो सकता। अतः स्पष्ट है कि आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र ने काव्य में कुछ नैतिक, आदर्शमूलक एवं साहित्यिक व्यवस्था का यत्न किया, किन्तु किसी प्रतिभा को बन्दीनी बनाने की दृष्टि से कदापि नहीं। कवि या स्रष्टा स्वयं ही औचित्य में बंधे यही काव्यपरम्परा की महानता है। आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र काव्य में अतिवादी प्रवृत्तियों में सन्तुलन और एक अनुशासन मूलक व्यवस्था चाहते थे। अतः वे कला और नीति के सुदृढ साहित्यिक स्तम्भों का काव्य में सानुपातिक योग हो यह स्वर लेकर उठे। काव्य व्यक्ति और समाज दोनों के लिए है अतः समाजिक मूल्यों का भी उचित योग उसमें होना चाहिए। क्षेमेन्द्र की स्थापना मूलतः व्यावहारिक समीक्षा को लेकर चली है। यद्यपि आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र के बहुत पहले ही भरत ने औचित्य पर प्रसंगवश संकेत किया है —

मेखलोरसि बन्धे च हास्यायैवोपजायते ॥

अर्थात् अदेशज वेष अशोभन ही है। मेखला वक्षस्थल में बांधी जाने पर हास्योत्पादिका ही होती है।

आनन्दवर्धनाचार्य ने भी औचित्य का महत्त्वांकन इस प्रकार किया है —

अनौचित्यादृते नान्यद्रसभंगस्य कारणम् ।

अर्थात् रसभंग का मूल कारण अनौचित्य को छोड़कर कोई अन्य नहीं।

आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र ने तो औचित्य सिद्धान्त को एक व्यापक शास्त्रीय व्यवस्था ही दे दी। उनकी गहरी और व्यापक दृष्टि में किसी एक तत्त्व पर अडियल आग्रह नहीं है, अपि तु सभी तत्त्वों पर समान एवं औचित्य पूर्ण ममत्त्व है। अतः आचार्य क्षेमेन्द्र ने घोषित किया कि काव्य का स्थिर जीवन औचित्य में ही है —

“औचित्यं रस सिद्धस्य स्थिरं काव्यस्य जीवितम्”
